That Simplicity which is Smart

can be achieved in your hot-weather frocks, by using

VOGUE PATTERNS

Frock No. Z3860-Z3861. Especially favored are these two-material frocks for afternoon wear. In this one crêpe de chine and lace are combined. $1

Simplicity of line is the first essential of the smart tub frock. It must not only be smart when first worn, but must retain that smartness after cleansing. The "fussy" frock never tubs well; the bias seam comes out a crooked ruin. Moreover, the dainty sheerness of summer materials reaches its greatest charm in simple line.

In every one of Vogue's sixteen Pattern Rooms you will find the new summer patterns for hot-weather frocks, designed to achieve the height of smartness through the correct use of simple line.

To simplicity of line, the hot-weather frock must add smartness of material. The unusual color, the new weave, the daring combination of material with material and color with color, make the summer gown distinctive.

In every one of Vogue's sixteen Pattern Rooms you will find color sketches and lengths of the smartest hot-weather materials arranged in piquant combinations for gowns. You have at your command Vogue's unlimited range of choice, Vogue's originality, and Vogue's unfailing good taste.

Frock No. Z3862. Trim and effective for street wear in summer is this one-piece frock. The wide pockets at the hipline give it a modish touch. $1.

USE VOGUE'S PATTERN SERVICE

Vogue maintains Pattern Rooms in sixteen leading cities. # THE WANAMAKER STORE

HOW A WOMAN MAY BE SMARTLY
BUT INEXPENSIVELY DRESSED
THIS SUMMER HAS BEEN SOLVED
BY THE WANAMAKER STORE

PARIS first had to meet the conditions which brought about simplicity in fashions. America has been fortunate in having her as an example.

Although the prices of good materials have advanced quite a bit, we have succeeded in mastering this side of the situation. The result is that we are now able to present to our Vogue readers styles of refinement and simplicity at very moderate prices.

The frocks are well made, and as you will see by the illustrations, the styles are correct.

Note—Fashion's newest combination of materials—linen and voile—is introduced in two frocks, Daria at 17.50 and Stefanida at 22.50. The combination is so practical and clever that one wonders why no one thought of it before.

Purchases may be made in the store or by mail.

KATIA—This inexpensive frock is a composite of a number of the features which make the Summer mode so charming—long, straight lines; the pleated bodice and tunic which give the effect of a long blouse; and the loose sash. In voile—rose, Copenhagen blue or white; white organdie vest and cuffs finished with stitching to match voile. 34 to 42 sizes. $10.75.

VASSA—A notable example of the lingerie frock for 1917. It is of white voile, and although it is trimmed with real baby Irish lace much of its effectiveness comes from the profusion of wee pleats which are arranged in clusters. The long, panel effect of the front is repeated in the back. 34 to 42 sizes. $25.

DARIA—In this frock, Fashion has made an effective combination of linen and voile—from the shoulder to just above the knees the frock is of voile; so are the sleeves. Of course, the entire frock is laid in straight pleats to give the effect of the coat dress which is both smart and comfortable. White or Copenhagen blue. 34 to 42 sizes. $17.50.

STEFANIDA—Although this might be called a linen frock it really is a combination of linen and voile, as the latter forms the long inset panel in the front and the deep cuffs—however, the contrast of materials is not severe, as the voile is appliqued with soutache braid. In white, brown or Copenhagen blue. 34 to 42 sizes. $22.50.

TAMARA—As many women have been asking for a two-piece shirtwaist frock, we have created this simple little dress of white linen-finished lawn. The blouse is finished with fine stitching and pearl buttons, and the skirt is beautifully pleated all around. 34 to 42 sizes. $15.

PARASKEVA—As it has been said that this is the best-looking linen model from Paris—it is by Cheruit—this season, we have had it copied in fine handkerchief linen; navy blue, embroidered in white; white embroidered in navy blue. Yes, it is a two-piece dress. 34 to 42 sizes. $37.50.

COSTUME JEWELRY

by

OSTBY & BARTON COMPANY

IF, as they say, art is a way of expressing one's feeling about things—then Style is the most intimate of all the arts.

And just because style is such a personal thing, the woman with a flair for costume is delighting in the new Costume Jewelry—with its vivid color, its infinite variety, its air of high personality.

She selects her jewelry to emphasize the dominant note of her costume. She cannot wear the characterless jewelry one sees everywhere.

But only in the little shops with their fortunate connections in the Rue de la Paix has she been able to find individuality—unless she had her Ring, her Brooch, her Pendant designed specially, and at prohibitive cost.

Some twelve months ago the eminent House of Ostby & Barton originated the idea of making Costume Jewelry available to women everywhere.

With designs created by the leading jewelry designers of America and Europe, this new Costume Jewelry is individual to the last shade of distinction, alive with character and color, and—contemporary.

Executed solely in genuine precious and semi-precious stones set in 14K yellow gold, green gold and white gold (with the color and lustre of platinum).

This distinguished jewelry may be had of representative costume shops and department stores in the larger cities, and of first class jewelers. Ask for it by name—Costume Jewelry.

The ROAMER

America's Smartest Car

TO see a ROAMER is to desire to own it; to drive this vibrationless thing of power is to be convinced that here, at last, is beauty wedded to mechanical worth. Quite apart in appearance from any motor car made in America, the ROAMER instills a joy of ownership no ordinary "automobile" could possibly engender.

There are a great many excellent people who are content with automobiles of mediocre design, rococo furniture and mid-Victorian architecture, and then there are the comparative few who discriminate wisely and well. It is for these latter that we build the ROAMER with painstaking care. It is for these we finish each ROAMER in a different color scheme according to the preference of the purchaser and without additional cost, and it is these who finally buy this unflagging indomitable creature of speed and stamina.

The ROAMER 6-45 is priced at $1850 the car; the ROAMER 6-90 at $2950; prices of other models, together with an interesting booklet, sent you upon request.

Educated—Not Merely Schooled

Which, in Brief, is the Spirit of Oaksmere

THIS is the time of year when we are inclined to measure a school by what the student has done. The real test of value is what the student can do.

Any creature that has memory can be schooled—that is to say trained—to do certain things in a mechanical way. Memorizing sums in arithmetic, or pages of history, or learning by rote the social graces, is not education but mere schooling.

Oaksmere does not graduate young ladies who live to fit in a social groove. It sends forth young women who are fit to live.

All the resources of the school, the activities of its distinguished faculty of educational experts, are directed to this end.

When the United States entered the war, Oaksmere's first aid classes were developed into a Red Cross class, the six weeks' course leading to National Organization Red Cross Certificates.

The school's perfectly equipped hospital with its diet kitchen became one of the busiest buildings on the estate.

Greater stress was placed upon the automobile course in which the students are instructed in the mechanism and operating of their own cars.

Courses in business, keeping accounts, stenography, typewriting and gardening were emphasized so that its students go forth fitted to meet the responsibilities of these days of war.

This was accomplished without changing the order of the organization of Oaksmere.

The thorough, comprehensive work in the academic courses, in the correlated departments of art, music, dancing, dramatics and household arts, were not interrupted.

The Practice House continued to give the student the actual experience in presiding over her own home with all the responsibilities of an establishment from the direction of servants and domestic science to the designing of her own gowns.

Oaksmere is a "new" school in that it makes preparedness real.

It develops initiative in its students; it gives them poise and the knowledge which enables them to think clearly and to act wisely in emergencies like that which now confronts the nation, as well as in their familiar activities.

This is the sum total of education.

There is only one way in which the Oaksmere idea can be carried out and that is by opening every department and resource of the school to each student. Therefore, a flat rate of $2,000 a year is charged. There are no extras.

If you wish to know more about the departments in Oaksmere and its distinguished faculty and gain some idea of the spaciousness and beauty of the estate, we will be glad to send you catalogues and bulletins for the asking.

IN the Homestead School, parents find a school which is in every way a real home, rich in the wholesome, gentle atmosphere of the "Old South."

On the brow of a hill, overlooking a wide and sunny valley, stands the main building of the school, a fine old colonial brick, with white walls and pillars.

Fifty acres of this happy valley, embracing majestic woods and green fields, where the air is dry and invigorating, and the water from mountain springs pure and abundant, constitute the Healing Springs estate secured for the school.

The teaching staff is composed of gentlewomen —college graduates. Each is a specialist in her particular department.

The school offers the regular preparatory courses demanded by colleges of high standing throughout the country, as well as special courses arranged to meet the particular needs of those girls who are not going to college.

DEVON MANOR

Training the American Girl for Her Big Future

WOMANHOOD today is standing on the threshold of a new era. Picture your daughter during the coming years when her mind and her heart must ring true while Time molds and remodels the American woman.

You don't know what she will do in those years, but you know what kind of woman you want her to be. She must be well enough physically to find life good. She must be big enough mentally to find life interesting. Her sympathies must be wide enough to make her life one of true service.

She must be a thoroughly efficient wife and mother, running her household with the same skill with which her husband conducts his business. She must be a woman whose very presence lends charm upon occasions of any nature.

It takes a big school to fit a girl for such a place. Devon Manor is that kind of school. Its curriculum is exceptional in the range of subjects beyond the usual college-preparatory and junior-college courses —such as Social Service, Secretaryship, Household Arts and Sciences, Journalism, Music, Art, Arts and Crafts, Expression, Kindergarten. Its college-trained faculty fully measure up to their unusual opportunities. It is a school with a purpose—and the power to make it count.

Devon Manor is situated in the vicinity of Valley Forge, a region rich with the heritage of the past. It looks out over the beautiful Chester Valley like a man undaunted by anything that might be beyond the turn of the road. A suburban school, thirty minutes from Philadelphia, it enjoys the cultural advantages of that city while commanding the finest surroundings for quiet nerves and concentration of interests.

A girl will be happy at Devon Manor because of exceptional comforts. Her room is large, with high ceiling and many windows. A private bathroom is at the disposal of every suite. Wide verandas encircle the main building—one of five—making the outdoors constantly accessible. The morning sun flooding the dining-room gives the day a cheerful start.

With the Manor farm to supply fresh vegetables, a herd of prize Guernseys to give milk, three artesian wells on the grounds for water, and large modern kitchens for preparing the food, the resident dietitian finds it easy to make the meals thoroughly satisfying.

Outdoors the Devon Manor girl has sixteen acres for her recreation—tennis, basketball, hockey, archery, fencing. Horseback riding, golf and skating are popular as well. Not only is her play outdoors, but her class-rooms are outdoors, too. A resident physician and nurse look after her health.

A Corner of the Dining-room

If this atmosphere appeals to you as a place for your daughter during these vital years of her life, if you respond to the Devon Manor ideal in training the American girl for her big future, send for the catalog for further details.

Lake Forest Academy for Boys Lake Forest, Illinois

Eastern Training Aim Distinctively Educational

To secure a thorough preparatory education it was formerly considered necessary to seek it only in the East. This mid-Western school has won the respect of the great colleges East and West because of the soundness of mental training and the spirit of service in its graduates. It offers alike to Western, Southern and Eastern boys a thorough education in the non-sectional and stimulating atmosphere of the mid-West.

Lake Forest is strictly preparatory for college. Definite preparation for entrance examinations of Yale, Princeton, Harvard, Mass. Tech., etc. Graduates admitted without examination to all certificate universities. Lake Forest helps a boy, while he is under the guidance of older men, to get a grip on himself that stands him in good stead when facing the problems incident to college freedom. It aims to instill in a boy a feeling of his own ultimate responsibility for his body, brain and soul. Its aim is distinctly educational and for service—not profit.

Mid-Western School Not Maintained for Profit

The Academy is situated on a spacious campus on the shore of Lake Michigan. The town itself, one hour north of Chicago, is a residential center of beauty and culture—without saloons. Entire school open to visitors at all times. A personal visit is urged whenever possible.

Thorough physical training for every boy. All athletics. Swimming-pool, tennis, golf.

INTERLAKEN

A School that teaches boys practical Americanism

A school community on a 700-acre country estate, 200 acres of woodland surrounding Silver Lake and 500 acres of farm land. Education through useful work. Today the world's motto is: "Make yourself useful, do something productive." At Interlaken all academic work is applied in practical mechanical and agricultural training. The sons of business and professional men learn to use hammer and saw; to build; to drive teams; to milk cows; to plant and prune trees; to grow vegetables in gardens of their own; to make hay; to construct buildings; to fell trees. As work leaders in office and shop they get executive experience and share responsibility. By working together as "citizens" in a school community, each doing his share, they learn how to do team work. Early hours for rising and going to bed, a simple, open-air life, a definite requirement of manual labor, a constant readiness to respond to emergencies—these, with plenty of athletics, group or team games constitute, we believe, thorough training in Americanism and preparedness.

THE SUMMER CAMP
Mid-June to September

The camp offers ten weeks of life in the sunshine and open country amid the flowers, animals and birds; an opportunity to share gardening and farm work; to assist in the construction work on buildings. Boys make birdhouses, boats, furniture for themselves and the homesteads, under supervision of skilled teachers. Canoeing, water sports and bathing in Silver Lake. Repose and quiet for growth in the silence of woodlands. Cross-country excursions; camping trips to Lake Michigan and the Sand Dunes. Athletics—tennis, soccer, baseball, swimming matches. Junior department for younger boys. Intimate companionship of teachers and camp counselors. Vigorous outdoor life that makes sound bodies, clear eyes and strong muscles.

THE SCHOOL
Boys received at any time

Thorough instruction in sciences, mathematics and languages as well as in literary subjects for engineering and professional studies at university. Prepares for all universities and colleges. An experienced faculty of trained teachers with long experience; one for each eight pupils. Small classes and individual instruction. Special talents are developed as a basis for work in later life. Natural method of language instruction. Spanish teacher for Spanish. Excursions to neighboring points of interest, to Lake Michigan, the Dune country. Visits to factories and industrial centers are part of the school course. Personal association of teachers with students in their home life and on the campus.

Combined with my regular college course I took the course in Home Economics. I have learned to design and make my own patterns and clothes, and to buy and prepare foods properly. I also learned something about interior decoration. Other girls took the B.A. course; still others the B.S. in Secretarial studies. Rockford offers whichever you want."

PREPAREDNESS has passed from a fad into a fact. Doing one's serious best is no more than the common concern of every individual. It is natural, then, that at a time when young men are drilling to fight, young women should drill for a life at home, in its way as trying as the trenches.

The woman with the well-rounded education and mature judgment is at this time especially, a priceless national asset, and those schools which turn out young women of this calibre are performing a great service to this country.

The Woman Must Also Serve

At last the clouds of war have come to a head and the storm is upon us; we must no longer discredit, but accept in full, the seriousness of the situation.

What steps are you taking to make your daughters of service in this time of national need? Are you simply training them in the ways of lady, or are you training them for strong, purposeful womanhood?

Are they simply "attending school," or are they getting the very best out of an excellent school?

CAMP LIFE—

The Surest Road
to Physical Fitness

PHYSICAL fitness is the first requirement for service both on the firing line and behind it. No matter how many academic degrees you may have won, unless you possess a constitution which insures your capacity for hard work, the nation cannot depend upon your services.

You owe it to your country and you owe it to your children to give them the best possible opportunity for physical development. The Summer Camp affords such an opportunity. Life in the open and exercise for every sinew and muscle—this is Nature's way to health, the surest way known.

Will you look into the camp question now, before it is too late, and insure for your son or daughter the benefits which the Summer Camp offers?

The Next Vogue

THE "IN THE COUNTRY" NUMBER of VOGUE

ALTHOUGH our next issue is to be the In the Country number of Vogue, it's not at all the peaceful pastoral it sounds. Nowadays, when the innocent invitation "come into the garden Maud," is extended, it means that Maud had better lay aside her property shepherd's crook and her likewise property "modern" smock, and get ready for a regular day of it—old gloves and all.

EVERY WOMAN HOEING HER BIT

That's what every smart woman knows just now; just how to woo the shy onion from the reluctant soil, and how many potatoes may live in one hill without causing slum congestion. She may cast her eye wistfully at "meadows trim with daisies pied," but she then determinedly turns to the problem of that dark and durable vegetable, the beet, and how to raise it. And this is all because of her penchant to "do her bit"—and a scientific bit, too, while she is at it. So Vogue is going to have an article about the gentle art of vegetable farming and just what actually and practically can be done besides reading about it for fifteen minutes in the privacy of one's own room every morning.

Whoever made that remark about getting back to the simple life, meaning the country, was all wrong. It's in the country that we have to pay particular attention to our surroundings, particularly our clothes. The very smallest potato the garden wears (since hyacinths are not recognized by the government as food-stuffs) would be eyeing us reproachfully if we didn't live up to the back-drop nature has provided for us there. Helen Dryden has made some drawings of country clothes for our next issue, so all of us can become a credit to the landscape, by the simple process of reading a single copy of Vogue.

LIVING UP TO ONE'S LANDSCAPE

And still continuing this question of what summer will expect us to look like: Vogue has been able to photograph Mrs. Castle in some of her newest clothes and all the newest poses she wears with them. Then there are to be some summer blouses that will keep us thinking hard for a while; and photographs of some of our actresses in their summer homes, giving a correct demonstration of their idea of country life.

Vogue is a great believer in the strengthening of our coast artillery—that's why we are going to have a page of the best-constructed bathing suits we could find, and photographed while they were being worn by the most perfect specimens of representative America while braving the stormy deep at Long Beach.

IT IS A VERSATILE VOGUE

Perhaps there is a tiny sentimental pulse in Vogue's heart, because it thinks nothing of finding out all the details of the smartest spring weddings and devoting whole pages to them. That's what is going to happen in the next issue.

Then, there are to be some photographs of the lovely costumes in "Peter Ibbetson." They're just the kind that Redfern made for your grandmamma; the ones that made you wonder how on earth she managed to lead such an active life.

FOLLOWING NEW YORK FASHION AFIELD

Having Accomplished Its Patriotic Duty, for the Moment, with "Wake Up Day" and Seen That All Its Charities Were Running Smoothly, Society Took an Afternoon Off for the First Races of the Season

This, for the moment, is Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs' newest version of the gaura ornament for the coiffure

NEW YORK is spending its days—and nights—in an earnest effort to wake up. True, we are stretching our arms and yawning a bit in the process, and there has come upon us, following the first rousing alarm of war, the inevitable inclination to turn over and take just one more nap, but this we are valiantly combating. For one whole day at least, New York was vividly alive; from noon until night of "Wake Up Day," Fifth Avenue echoed with the tramp of marching feet. Little feet they were in many cases, the feet of boys and girls belonging to the schools and to the various junior patriotic organizations, which gave an excellent account of themselves. The ambulance organizations were also represented, a number of women's clubs took part, and, of course, the army and navy and the national guard were on the field. All of fashionable New York which was not engaged in the procession sat in the windows, on the balconies, or in motors along the way and cheered the marchers.

THE ACTIVE PATRIOTS

Among those whose patriotism took active form were Mrs. James B. Eustis, Mrs. Lydig Hoyt, and Mrs. George Baker, Jr., who, in the rôle of aids, gave picturesque support to the Grand Marshal, Lieutenant-colonel Latham Reed of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, and who handled their spirited mounts with skill that delighted the onlookers. With the suffrage contingent marched Mrs. Philip Lydig, who carried a banner for the entire line of march, while Mrs. John I. Blair bore the American flag. Miss Charlotte Delafield was another of those who demonstrated their willingness to work for the cause with heels as well as head, and a trio of enthusiastic young feminist marchers were Miss Audrey Osborn, Miss Camilla Morgan, and Miss Mercedes de Acosta. Mrs. Lydig's younger sister.

A great recruiting meeting had been planned for the afternoon at Carnegie Hall, where débutantes and young society matrons were to act as ushers and program vendors, but every one was so interested in the parade that it was not until evening that any sort of audience assembled there. In the meantime, the volunteer ushers had grown weary and found some other way of doing their bit, so professionals were in charge. The speakers were sufficiently diversified to appeal to every possible recruit. Those who did not care for Billy Sunday's slang, might respond to Mme. Cisneros's singing of the "Star-spangled Banner," and those whom the cool logic of former Attorney-general George W. Wickersham left unmoved, might thrill to Mrs. William Faversham's "England, My England" or to her reading of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." Even fashion interest was not lacking on the stage, for Mrs. Faversham wore a gown of an order which is now much in favor and very smart. One interesting feature of this gown, which is sketched at the lower left on page 44, is that it is a revival of a fashion which was in vogue not so very many years ago. It is simply a long slim gown with no marked waist-line and yet with no suggestion of swathing draperies. It suggests a princesse gown in that it reveals the outline of the figure, but it entirely lacks the element of "fit" which is usually associated with the princesse gown. It is simply a manipulation of material so that it forms a more or less carelessly fitting sheathe for the figure. Mrs. Faversham's gown was long with a considerable train and was, as such gowns usually are, cut to a deep point in the back and front; it was of black and gold brocade with flowing sleeves of black tulle.

That tulle which promises to outdistance its rival, the lace scarf, swathed Mrs. Leonard Thomas as she chatted with Mr. Maurice Roche and others concerned in "Le Mariage d'Héloïse"

Even on "Wake Up Day," New York took thought of her Allies, and while things were being boomed for Uncle Sam on Fifth Avenue, only a few blocks away in the quiet of the Colony Club, a matinée was being held for the benefit of the Serbian Relief. Miss Gertrude Kingston and her company appeared in Barrie's charming little play, "Rosalind," and Mme. Gabrielle Gills sang. New York is tremendously enthusiastic about Mme. Gills, who adds to her beautiful voice the charm of personality. When she sang at the Colony Club, Mme. Gills wore the quaint and delightful costume sketched at the lower right on this page. It was fashioned of white satin buttoned from top to hem—and the hem, by the way, touched the floor—with tiny jet buttons. Over this, there was a black chiffon coat caught on one side beneath a gardenia and at the other side fastened to the wrist.

Mme. Gills was one of the soloists at the concert on the preceding day for the benefit of the Children's Orthopedic Ward of the Postgraduate Hospital. For this benefit and for the pantomime revue for the benefit of the Union des Arts, which took place a few evenings later, Mrs. Vincent Astor opened her New York home. The afternoon musicale was held in the ballroom, but so large was the audience that it overflowed into the marble room beyond, where chairs and settees were arranged in haste for the unexpectedly many guests. Among the members of the younger set who sold programs and acted as ushers were Miss Sara D. Price Collier, Miss Helen A. Hoadley, Miss Mary Cass Canfield, and Miss Kitty Lawrence. Mrs. Astor, in a gown of dull blue chiffon with a soft hat swathed in ostrich plumes of the same tone, was guardian to the affair. Mrs. George B. Post, Jr., wore a gown of soft tan gabardine and a large black hat. Very smart was the tall flower-crowned hat worn by one of the guests and sketched at the top of this page; merely an edge of straw was visible about the face, below the flowery crown.

GUESTS AT "LE MARIAGE D'HELOÏSE"

For the pantomime "Le Mariage d'Héloïse," which was staged in the south drawing-room on the evening of the Wednesday following "Wake Up Day," smart New York turned out en masse. The pantomime itself was delightful, and photographs of the principal actors are shown on pages 54 and 55 of this issue. It was preceded by a brief talk by Jacques Copeau on the work being done by the Union des Arts, an organization in Paris which aims to meet the needs of artists, literary men, and musicians who are victims of the war.

Many distinguished costumes and many beautiful jewels were worn at this benefit. Mrs. Astor in a costume of pale pink chiffon and white tulle, which accentuated the fairness of her complexion and hair, made the delicately lovely figure sketched on page 44, second from the right. The heaviest thing about her seemed the string of beautiful pearls about her throat and her earrings of pendant diamonds. Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs wore a new variation of the feather coiffure which she wore so successfully at Palm Beach. This time, black gaura was thrust into the knot at the back of her head, spreading out high above her head in the dainty fan fashion which is sketched at the upper left on the preceding page.

Apricot satin and flesh tulle costumed the surpassing slenderness of Mrs. Lydig Hoyt

Mrs. Burke Roche, who wears vivid colors so successfully, chose to create on this occasion a picture drawn in softest pastel tones. Her gown was of brocade of a silvery whiteness that matched the tone of her hair. Over it was worked a vague design in dull white silver and the palest of pale blues. This gown, sketched at the lower left on the preceding page, had a long train and was caught in at the feet over the right on page 43. This sort of coiffure has been worn by several society women this winter and it is very effective, especially with a simple white gown. A very lovely coiffure was sponsored by a tall, fair, and slender woman and is sketched at the left on page 44. Her hair was so arranged as to be flat all over her head without any perceptible knot or twist. Low over her brow and about her head was drawn a circlet of dull wrought silver. The circlet is a favorite this season, and it is effective and rather generally becoming. Sometimes this circlet is simply a thin band of gold set with jewels. In the case of the woman who is sketched at the right in the middle of page 44, the band was set with pearls, and the back of the bodice showed an interesting use of pearls for ornamentation. Pearls have been the jewels most in favor throughout the entire winter.

Much tulle is still being worn. For a time, the scarf of this airy stuff seemed to be superseded by that of lace, but the becomingness of tulle is not to be equaled by that of any other material; it seems to have won a more or less permanent place in feminine costume. Mrs. Leonard Thomas is sketched in the middle of page 43, as she stood chatting with Mr. Maurice Roche and several other members of the cast of the pantomime; she has her slim shoulders swathed in tulle.

Mrs. Lydig Hoyt was gowned in apricot satin supplemented at the left side by flesh-colored tulle, which merged with scarcely a perceptible gradation of tint into her delicately modeled arms and shoulders. She is pictured in the sketch in the middle of page 44, as she perched on the edge of her chair to get a better view of the stage. The revival of "Peter Ibbetson" has attracted garden hat; one of them is sketched at the left of the group at the top of this page. These hats were of drooping leghorn in natural tone draped about with pale green tulle, and a high flaring bow of the tulle rose at the back, while an end of tulle escaped over the edge and became a scarf about the throat, with an end falling over the right shoulder. To Miss Hoadley's wedding came a number of the debutantes of the season, among them Miss Elsie Saltus, who wore the smart hat of lustrous black straw edged with fluffy black feathers which is in the middle of the group at the top of this page.

One glimpses many smart hats and frocks in the fashionable streets and shopping districts these days. Miss Alice Huntington, whose engagement to Mr. Charles H. Marshall was recently announced, wears the flat hat of blue straw with three bands of varnished ribbon about it, which is sketched at the right just below, on this page. Miss Kitty Lawrence wears the dark blue coat and the skirt of plaid blue velours sketched at the upper right on this page, and with her little blue hat and well-arranged veil she makes a most attractive figure. Mrs. Leonard Thomas was seen lunching the other day in the frock of dull red cloth sketched at the lower right on page 44. The interesting feature of this frock was the way the sleeves rose at the top of the shoulder a bit, giving the effect of padding. With this frock, Mrs. Thomas wore a close round hat of dull red feathers.

A play recently given at the Plaza gave members of the Alumnae of the Spence School an opportunity to display their dramatic and operatic abilities. "Gentleman Jack" was the musical play chosen for the occasion, and members of the cast appeared not only as venturesome ladies of the period of romance, but as dashing highwaymen as well. A picturesque and amusingly mannish innkeeper was very smart audiences. It marks the return to the stage of Lionel Barrymore after an absence of twelve years. He and his brother, John Barrymore, who have important parts in the play, have always been very popular with society. In a box one evening a short time ago were seen Mrs. J. Gordon Douglas and Mrs. Cornelius H. Tangeman. Mrs. Tangeman's costume showed an interesting use of the lace scarf. Her scarf, which is shown in the sketch at the right of the group at the top of this page, was banded at the upper edge with dark fur, which caused it to stand out a bit about her throat in a very becoming fashion.

THIS IS THE BRIDE'S SEASON

Not a fortnight passes now without its quota of war weddings. One of those which took place recently was the marriage of Miss Louise R. Hoadley to Mr. Ellery Sedgwick James at St. Bartholomew's Church. The wedding had been planned for late June at Southampton, Long Island, where Mr. and Mrs. Hoadley have a country place, but the bridegroom is a member of the Officers' Reserve Corps of Yale and is momentarily expecting a commission, so the date of the wedding was advanced. Miss Hoadley's bridesmaids wore very charming hats which afford an attractive suggestion for a summer (Above) People who aren't inspired never would think of putting black point d'esprit net and black lace over flesh-colored satin, and people who aren't geniuses never could accomplish it successfully. But it's certainly worth while striving for, for this is the way it looks when it's done in exactly the right way.

Pearls from La Tausca

(Left) It was thoughtful of her to sit at her desk so that we could see the back of her gown, but it really isn't wise to write any letters when one is wearing such a charming gown; one is so apt to say much more encouraging things than one means. The back of the gown is just as absorbing as the front,—even more so, for it develops draperies of black lace, which extend into shadows of trains

Lucile does love that hooped skirt silhouette, and now she has it so completely under control that she can do it without the aid of a hoop. This evening gown of shell pink faille and cream colored lace looks as though it were carrying concealed hoops, but it's the cleverness of those plaits about the hips and the heaviness of the faille itself that makes it behave that way. The plaits at the hem are something new to think about. On the corsage is Lucile's signature,—a knot of silken flowers in exquisitely unexpected colors, and there are three narrow-as-possible folds of satin, green, yellow, and mauve. The real facts about the back of the gown appear below (Left, on the opposite page) All sorts of delightful things can be blamed on tea, and tea-gowns are the most delightful of all. Lucile knows that a woman's charm can best be expressed in a tea-gown; tea-gowns are allowed all sorts of expressions that other frocks couldn't think of using. In the beginning, this gown is an underdress of pale pink chiffon and lace with quillings of pale green gauze ribbon on the skirt and the sleeves,—those are the things that make one stop and think. Over this underdress is a coat of net and lace, cut on those long straight lines that just can't keep from being graceful. But we're saving the best till the last,—a lattice-work of pink satin happens all the way down the front of the underdress and the coat

LUCILE GOES A LONG WAY FARTHER THAN DID THAT ARTIST WHO MIXED HIS COLORS WITH BRAINS; SHE MIXES HERS WITH INSPIRATION

It's a woman's world; the designers are always thinking up new ways of vanquishing man. Now they've invented a new straw that bears a startling resemblance to very heavy lace, and they make it into hats like this. The straw—it's gray, this time—forms the crown and part of the brim, the edge of the brim is of wired gray tulle, and the wreath is of gray wheat and red flowers. It's hats like this that prove the bitter truth of that wise new saying, "It's always the man that pays and pays and pays"

Life is going to be just one round of organdy, if we do what the designers urge us to do, this summer. And it's going to be extremely easy to do as they urge, if organdy can be made into things as charming as this hat. It is of white organdy and bands of écru organdy heavily embroidered in écru thread; the trimming is of thistles and yellow and white daisies, and over the edge of the brim droops a fold of embroidered organdy. So many summer hats are doing that mysterious fold,—mystery repeats itself, you know; two hats from Bruck-Weiss

The white leghorn hat is completely veiled with cream lace, banded with silver and rose ribbons, and splashed with bright red cherries. The stole is of biscuit colored Georgette crêpe striped with narrow bands of American ermine,—that's just a polite way of saying weasel. ## A STAR-SPANGLED PARIS

THE lack of United States flags in Paris prevented anything in the way of a visible demonstration in honor of the new Ally for a day or two after the declaration of war by the United States. Even then, on some of the first flags which appeared, the stars were not correctly placed; but the lack was speedily supplied, and suddenly flags were flung out all over the city—everywhere the Stars and Stripes fluttered side by side with the French flag or with the grouped flags of the Allies. Flags decorated the front of the Chambre des Députés, back of the gray columns. Over the entrance of the Government buildings, over each gateway of the Louvre, from all the hotels and clubs, the flag of the United States appeared at last in the place which had waited for it so long, beside the flags of all the Allied Nations.

And this was not only in Paris. In accordance with the order of the Government, the Star-spangled Banner has been flung to the breeze in all the towns and villages of France, and all the walls are placarded with posters bearing the President's historic message to Congress. This message will be read in all the schools of France and published in all the newspapers of the French Republic. France is determined that her children shall know that once more the two nations are fighting side by side for the great cause of Liberty. There is something quite touching in the welcome given by France to the western Republic, a certain sympathetic greeting which is almost tear-compelling.

Spring Has Come to Paris to the Tune of the Marseillaise and the Star-spangled Banner, and the Tireless Couturiers Seem Inspired by This New Burst of Hope and Enthusiasm

Whether it is the flags or the sunshine which has wrought the change, for the moment Paris is almost gay. The streets are crowded, and the tea-rooms and theatres filled to overflowing. The new production at the Théâtre Edouard VII, a conte galant in three acts, while most certainly not a play for the jeune fille, is pretty and amusing. Mlle. Marken, in the rôle of the marquise, scored a distinct success, and M. Harry Baur, who so recently commanded a man-o'-war at the Gymnase, devoted himself to gentler pursuits as the amorous Abbé de Fleurange. Vivacious Marguerite Duval delighted a house full of admirers, and the old-time silken frocks suited her to perfection. On the whole, however, one was reminded of the tales of the "Decameron," and "La Folle Nuit"

MODELS FROM JENNY

Jenny could write a book called "Straight Silhouettes I Have Known," and then have enough straight silhouettes left over to keep the Parisienne content for the rest of the season. When she goes in for coats, they somehow get all straightened out, too, like this coat of black alpaca; it hangs just straight, and that's all—except for the blue embroidery on it and the white crêpe de Chine tunic under it

The Paris couturiers just toss off blue serge frocks the way some people knit; perhaps it soothes them. The strange part of it is that each one is "different"; this has a blue serge cravat and red velours de laine trimming

This sash will flutter and blow about and do all the dashing things that a sash should do because it's of dark blue mousseline de soie, and therefore susceptible to drafts. Oddly enough, this is on a blue serge tailored dress

This tailored dress of light brown poplin over a white muslin underblouse really should always be seen in company with its brown poplin coat, which is sketched at the right. Mlle. Jane Renouardt wore them both in "La Volonté de l'Homme"—played at the Gymnase, you know

Our troubles begin when we look at the coat of this brown poplin "frock"; it slips on over the head. Is it that the heroine gracefully slips off her wrap—over her head? No doubt Mlle. Renouardt retired to the wings if the occasion demanded that she remove her coat

When the Parisienne is content to go about in straight white frocks we know that she knows that a blue belt and pearl buckle here and a dash of blue wool embroidery there, help a lot. It is true indeed that simplicity is the best policy was something a bit unusual, even for Paris. "La Veille d'Armes" at the Gymnase, is about to give place to "La Volonté de l'Homme," in which Mlle. Jane Renouardt will appear, wearing some new and very fetching frocks by Lanvin.

SEEN ON THE PARIS STAGE

For Mlle. Renouardt was made the dainty robe d'intérieur sketched on page 51, at the lower right. Of periwinkle blue Georgette crêpe combined with the same tissue in palest rose, this charming indoor dress is trimmed with oval beads of pale rose and blue crystal. A cravat of beads is knotted at the throat, and bead ball tassels finish the falling ends of the periwinkle blue girdle.

Another of these frocks is the tailleur, at the upper right and left on this page; it is of light brown silk poplin of a peculiar sort which, for want of a better name, is called "ondine." The odd jacket-tunic is drawn on over the head and may be left open to the belt in front or buttoned at the throat. It is plaited on each hip and is slit on each side from belt to hem. The girdle, which is very straight and wide, is of light brown leather, and the long simple sleeve is fastened with a single button at the wrist. Under this tunic is worn a sort of suspender frock of poplin with a straight plaited skirt and suspenders drawn over a blouse of soft white muslin. A smart little brown straw hat, trimmed with two jaunty brown wings, completes this costume, which for perfection leaves nothing to be desired.

Another recent model from the maison Lanvin is made of white camel's hair serge, smartly combined with dull blue linen; it is sketched at the bottom of this page, in the middle. The loose back panel of the skirt is lined with blue linen, and the jacket is lined with blue linen also, and this linen is turned back to form collar and revers. There is a white serge waistcoat, and the jacket is edged all about with blue embroidery; the buttons are blue, and the undersleeves are of blue linen.

More delicate is a Lanvin frock of palest rose Georgette crêpe combined with black satin and embroidered with écreu beads. With this frock is worn a broad hat of black satin, with a draped crown ornamented with jet.

SPRING FROCKS CHEZ JENNY

Mme. Jenny's new models are as smart as it is possible for frocks to be. The Jenny silhouette continues straight, and the Jenny touch continues inimitable. One of the prettiest of the new models from this house—positively delicious is this frock—is sketched on page 49, at the lower left. This frock is of dark blue serge with a skirt loosely belted, fetching little pockets tasseled with blue silk, and revers and "V" of red velours de laine. The narrow loose girdle is of blue serge, and the smart knotted cravat is of blue serge also. This cravat of serge is very new and very pretty and has a sturdy chic which is all its own.

A new tailored costume from the maison Jenny is of dark blue serge, girdled with dark blue mousseline de soie, which is knotted on the side, with the ends falling almost to the bottom of the skirt; this costume is sketched on page 49 at the lower right. Some of the new models from this house are trimmed delicately with organdy. Dull blue organdy is often prettily combined with black satin or white crêpe de Chine, while white organdy gives a dainty touch to numberless creations of the house. Simple as the Jenny models are, they are finished with such artistry that one is always impressed with their perfection.

THE GENIUS OF MME. RENÉE

Mme. Renée of the maison Premet is wearing a charming little creation of gray serge and black satin. The serge, which forms the top of the frock, is of a very light gray indeed, and the black satin girdle which is tied over the apron front of the black satin skirt is lined with gray serge. This girdle is rather wide and is tied loosely over the chemise-like frock, preserving the straight silhouette.

Another recent Premet model is made in somewhat the same fashion. Instead of serge, the top of this frock is made of white silk jersey, cross-barred with black, and the girdle is entirely of black satin. This new Premet silhouette is very interesting and speaks volumes for the creative genius of Mme. Renée, who designs a new frock, apparently, every day.

NEWS FROM THE MODISTES

The newest hat is a sort of composite beret and casquette and is worn at the moment by every one. It appears in tissue, in white or very light gray velours de laine, in satin, in straw, and in straw alone. The "peak" of the casquette is continued all the way round, and the beret top is tilted back at varying angles, with sometimes a bit of trimming posed in front or on the side. The days of the cloche are numbered, judging from the new straight brims, and trimming seems to slip in and out of fashion from day to day.

Mme. Lanvin is making a small round hat trimmed with upstanding "swords" of vivid blue

MODELS FROM LANVIN

It is the divided aprons, gold-embroidered, which fall over the beaded tulle skirt of this black frock, that made it fit for Mlle. Vera Sergine to wear in the French version of "Within the Law"

(Left) Paris can't keep entirely to gray and beige. When white rough serge, lined and faced with dull blue linen, once entered a French mind, it had to be put into practice. Around the blue and black straw hat runs a plaited frill of blue ribbon

In "La Volonté de l'Homme," Mlle. Jane Renouardt, wore this Georgette crêpe dress. It seems as though the "will of a man" would be entirely subdued by such rose and periwinkle blue

You'll admit that it is unusual. The bodice of marine blue Liberty satin is embroidered; it has salmon pink linon sleeves like gauntlets; the linon tunic is fanned, now and again, with rose and gold ostrich. Ostrich, by the way, usually the uncurled variety, appears on many of the new hats, some of which are trimmed rather more than less. However, some of the very smartest hats seen so far in Paris are made of fine and very expensive straw in light gray or some shade of beige (there is a new straw hat exactly the shade of covert cloth) banded about the crown and bound all about the edge of the brim with grosgrain ribbon of the same shade. These hats, which are otherwise untrimmed, are exceedingly smart when worn with simple tailleurs.

THE SUMMER FURS

The Parisienne still wears her furs, and so cold have been the winter and the spring that it is unlikely that she will leave them off for some time to come. Owing to the war, smart furs show no marked change. The fur-trimmed frock is not so much in evidence as it was a year ago, but heavy fur trimming will appear again with the warm days, no doubt. Just now frocks are only scantily adorned with fur, usually opossum, castor, or putois. Just why these furs are smart now no one knows, but next week we shall doubtless be wearing something entirely different.

Instead of trimming a silk manteau with fur, as they did last year, the couturiers line, collar, and cuff the silk manteau of the season with beige serge. A piping of serge shows all about the edges of the coat. The cuffs are of generous size and the cache-nez collar is swathed high about the throat, with the ends carefully tucked in. It should be mentioned, in passing, that the coat is of black taffeta.

All that glitters is gold braid on some of the new serge frocks. It is odd, this trimming of serge with gold galloon, but it is smart. One simple model is girdled or banded twice about the hips with narrow gold braid, and a cravat of gold braid finishes the opening at the throat. These girdle-like bands of braid are not in the form of loose girdles, however, but are firmly sewed to the serge. Even more simple is a blue serge one-piece frock edged all about with a half-inch band of gold braid.

TALES OF CHEVIOT AND SERGE

A simple spring tailleur has a jacket of black cheviot which narrowly escapes being close-fitting, so straight and trim it is, and a skirt of black and white plaid cheviot. The cuffs and pocket-flaps of the jacket are of black and white plaid, and the cache-nez collar which envelopes the chin is of black cheviot lined with plaid tissue. With this frock is worn a severe little straw hat with a high square crown and a very narrow brim.

A one-piece frock of beige serge is enriched with an arabesque of blue stitching, which covers the bodice section, and over it is a plain serge belt, which is tied loosely in the back. The long plain sleeves are stitched at the wrist, and the collar is of blue satin. The straight skirt is plaited in panels, as so many of the new skirts are, and is very narrow in effect.

White organdy occurs to American minds, it is true, but not in this form; for here it is hung with marron velvet ribbons, and the further French touch is accomplished with violet flowers on each side

Little girls are wearing swagger little coats and hats of half-inch black and white plaid. The fashion of making coat and hat of the same tissue has been growing all winter until now half the tiny tots one sees are dressed in this pretty way. In green, light gray or checked stuffs, the small garments are very fetching.

IN THE BOIS

Of old, some of the pretty little French children seen playing in the Bois or reclining sumptuously in their "prams" were accompanied by English nurses. Now it is the invariable rule. One hears admonishing English on all sides, but it is rather a pity that so many of the French children are being taught such perfect cockney.

The bridle-path in the Bois is more and more crowded from day to day. Some of the costumes are very smart. Recently one trim little creature mounted on a big chestnut wore a coat and riding breeches of warm brown cheviot and on her head a small peaked cap, like a jockey's, of brown satin. Another rider wore a straight slit coat of black cloth belted with a wide loose girdle of black varnished leather. The effect was easy and "sporty," and the soft black hat with the brim carelessly turned back in front was very becoming to the brunette face underneath. Another Parisienne appeared in a very odd plaid coat in beige, black, and white above a black skirt. With this coat she wore a black bowler.

In the Bois, these days, one encounters whole companies of baby-

As usual, this gown is being dignified for all it is Worth. Black Chantilly clouds trail all about it, even from those rhinestone straps which are not the sleeves. There are fragile paillettes and blue silk roses, frankly willing to be thought strange faced boy scouts, bravely dressed in khaki. The oldest one among them can boast no more than ten summers, while some are obviously no more than seven. Curly-headed and flushed with exercise, they would compel even the Hun to lay down his arms in admiration. Their older brothers are perhaps already at the front.

Yachting, unfortunately, is a sport which can not be indulged in this season, but for land sports never has there been such a variety of pretty garments. From the plain silk sweater—and, be it known, the (Right) The general sympathy that nations all over the world have been showing for one another lately, may account for the fact that a French slip-over sweater is of emerald green silk, and green even to the coroso buttons at the neck sweater is untrimmed this season—to the mountain-climbing outfit, sports clothes are perfection. There is a sports frock of beige cheviot, with the jacket opening over a blue waistcoat, which is especially smart. The straight skirt falls in plaits on each side from flat hip pockets, and the straight loose coat is easily belted and profusely pocketed, as befits its purpose.

Spring has come in Paris to the tune of the "Marseillaise" and the "Star-spangled Banner."

A. S.

(Left) The lack of coal in Paris may cause these indoor jackets; they will remain for some time as overblouses, both for indoors and out. This is of vivid blue crêpe de Chine woven with gold, and its wandering belt is studded with jet

By virtue of its straight plaits and its rose pin stripes, going up and down, this French muslin dress proves its absolute forgetfulness of the wide silhouette. Gray velvet cording is something new on this kind of frock

Give a French couturier enough (or little enough) black satin, and things begin to happen right away. Blue beads happened to the collar of this deceptively simple frock, and blue and gold beads to the girdle

The dress begins with gray satin. Under the overblouse and over the underskirt is a go-between of gray crêpe de Chine. To get the word "apron" into print, this was opened under a shallow black velvet protection

(Right) Extremely amusing and utterly French was the flirtation dance that Mlle. Gabrielle Dorziat and M. Henry Caro-Delvaile did in the marriage scene. Mlle. Dorziat was a gay grisette in a yellow frock and checked ribbons, and M. Caro-Delvaile was a gallant suitor. When he offers her a modest little bouquet, the grisette just can't be annoyed and dances scornfully away; but when he pulls from his pocket a string of glistening pearls,—oh, well, you know how women are

(Below) The very first event in the pantomime was a game of "blind man's buff." The participants in that perfectly harmless indoor sport were (left to right) Miss Alexandra Emery, Mr. Felix Doubleday, Mr. Francis Roche (in front), Miss Mary Crocker Alexander, M. Paulet Thevenaz, Miss Mary Cass Canfield as Héloïse, the lady it's all about, Mr. Maurice Roche, and Miss Harriette Post. They wore the quaint costumes of that day when "blind man's buff" was society's idea of a good time

"LE MARIAGE D'HÉLOÏSE"

PERHAPS never in all its history has New York so gladly co-operated with the stage as it has done this season, in its long succession of charity entertainments. Late in April, at the home of Mrs. Vincent Astor, society and the stage again collaborated with great success, this time in behalf of the Union des Arts. This Union des Arts is one of the worthiest of French charities; it holds much the same place in France as the Actors' Fund does in America, although it gives aid not only to disabled and sick actors, but to painters, sculptors, musicians, and authors who are in need of help.

IN UNION THERE IS CHARITY

The union was founded three years ago by Rachel Boyer, who was at one time a noted actress of the Comédie Française. She amassed a large fortune, and she is exceedingly philanthropic. In Paris, where she makes her home, she is greatly loved and highly honored, and she numbers among her friends some of the greatest men and women in France. The Union des Arts, for which she works indefatigably, was founded under the patronage of the President of France and of the Ministère des Beaux Arts. In the three years of its brief existence, the Union has become one of the best-known and most efficient charities in all France. And not only in France is it known, but many New York society women have interested themselves in it and have done much for it. Among the women who are interested in it are Mrs. Vincent Astor, Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. F. Gray Griswold, Mrs. Benjamin Guinness, Mrs. Philip Lydig, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. E. T. Stotesbury, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt, Mrs. Whitney Warren, Mrs. Joseph Widener, and Miss Elsie de Wolfe.

At present, in France, it is impossible for the Union to raise the amount of money it needs,

That Was the Pantomime That Society Amateurs Gave So Successfully at Mrs. Vincent Astor's Home, for the Benefit of the "Union des Arts" owing to conditions caused by the war; yet the people who are forced to rely upon it for help are in desperate need of its assistance. Therefore Mlle. Gabrielle Dorziat, who recently arrived in New York, felt that she could best "do her bit" by enlisting the aid of New York society women in a benefit for the Union des Arts. She went to Mrs. Vincent Astor and laid before her the plans for the benefit. Not only was Mrs. Astor deeply interested, but she generously gave her home for the rehearsals and the performance, and donated the music and the stage for the production. "Le Mariage d'Héloïse," a charming little pantomime by Mlle. Dorziat, was chosen for the production, and it was given by some of the most talented and experienced of amateur actors and actresses, under the careful direction of Mlle. Dorziat and of M. Henry Caro-Delvaile.

THE WEDDING GUESTS

The quaint old French custom of having the wedding guests entertain the bride and groom furnished an opportunity for several noted French artists to play the parts of guests, in the wedding scene, and to entertain. Chief among these was Mme. Yvette Guilbert, who sang one of her exquisite chansons; as always, words are too clumsy to describe the way she did it. Mme. Gabrielle Gills, who is here by permission of the French government, sang, and M. Jacques Copeau spoke on the work which the Union des Arts has been doing in America. M. Paul Capellani, of the Comédie Française, recited several of Alfred de Musset's poems, and Mlle. Dorziat and M. Henry Caro-Delvaile danced.

The benefit was a huge success financially and artistically. The stage sets were decorated by Alfredo Sides, and although they were simple, they caught the spirit of the entire entertainment.

LIFE on a PERMANENT WAVE

I GAZED earnestly into the mirror and decided that I simply couldn't stand it any longer. Something would really have to be done about it. Nature had seen fit to curse me with straight hair, but you have to put Nature in her place, every now and then. I would show her that she wasn't going to have the last word on the subject.

"I will come back a changed woman," I promised my mirror, and went bravely forth to become permanently waved.

With sublime optimism, I stopped and bought a magazine. You see, I knew many women who had braved the permanent wave, and I was so overcome with wonder at the results that I didn't think of asking how they were achieved. If I had thought that there could be any possible disagreeableness connected with the process,—well, I never would have gone in for it, that's all. I am that sort of person. If I have a headache, I always suffer more than other people with headaches do; if I have a cold, I always know it is going to develop into far graver things than other people's colds could; if I bump my head, it always hurts me worse than it possibly could anybody else. If there's an epidemic of any particularly horrible disease, I always have every symptom, no matter what the doctor may say. If any one mentions the word "dentist" in my hearing, I am totally unnerved for hours afterwards; even when I'm being manicured, I am always in terror that something is going to slip and stick into me. I knew hazily that the process of permanent waving occupied three hours or thereabouts, and I thought I would while away the time with current fiction while the hair-dresser gently coaxed my willing tresses into the wave that won't come off. Ah, well, we live and learn.

A GLIMPSE OF THE FUTURE

I blithely entered the hair-dresser's where I was to meet my fate. A girl came toward me to tell me the glad news that Monsieur was getting ready for me, and my heart leaped with joy when I saw her, for I felt that I gazed on my future. Her hair lay in soft deep waves with irrepressible little curls bursting from bondage at her neck and temples. How clever it was of Monsieur to have her to greet his clients; she was the best advertisement he could possibly have had.

"How long ago did you have a permanent wave?" I asked her, as she disposed of my hat and coat.

"Oh," she said, "I never had one. My hair is naturally wavy." Some one is always taking the joy out of life.

She put me into a shapeless garment of white linen, which touched the floor, and which extended even unto long, long sleeves and a high, high neck. So clad, I looked startlingly like a charter member of the Ku Klux Klan. The garment had a strangely surgical air, and I grew a shade less joyous. From the room where the girl assured me Monsieur was making ready, issued sinister clankings. I waxed thoughtful.

The girl removed my hair-pins and my hair descended upon my shoulders,—there it was, just about as wavy as a fountain pen. I gazed at it intently, impressing it on my memory, bidding farewell, a long farewell, to all my straightness. Then the girl seized me and shampooed me so efficiently that every thought was washed out of my mind.

And then, as if to a flourish of trumpets, the door of the mysterious room was dramatically flung open and Monsieur appeared. No matter where one might see Monsieur, one would know immediately that he was a hair-dresser. He simply couldn't have been anything else. He probably came into the world clutching a pair of curling-tongs. He spoke not a word of English, and I have no French, so I felt we would get along well together. No, I do myself an injustice to say I have no French; I know two phrases, "Honi soit qui mal y pense," and "Il faut souffrir pour être belle." I found no use for the first, but I overworked the second.

The mysterious room was a bleak bare place, just four blank walls, a monotonous floor, and an uninspiring ceiling. In the very middle of the floor stood a chair, much like a dentist's chair and just about as inviting. Directly above it, a strange machine hung from the ceiling,—a mass of wires and coils and batteries, twisted and intermingled with diabolical ingenuity. Monsieur, with many superfluous gestures, motioned me to proceed, and as I entered the room, stumbling desperately over the linen gown, a horrid sentence flashed through my mind,—"The condemned woman approached the chair with a faltering step." I wondered why on earth I had started this thing, anyway.

IN THE THROES

They sat me in that hideous chair, and they bent my head back in a way nature had never intended it to go and clamped it into a headrest,—a sort of modified Iron Maiden. Then Monsieur got in back of me and began doing things that I couldn't see to the machine above me,—a proceeding which made me extremely nervous. I asked for a mirror so that I could see what was going on, but my request, merely the outcome of a natural and healthy curiosity, was greeted with shrieks of protest from the girl and with squeals of horror from Monsieur, to whom she translated it. It seemed that Monsieur had spent years and years in perfecting his marvelous process, and he guarded his secret with frenzied jealousy. No one should see how it was done while he lived,—sacred name of a pig, no! He spluttered expletives at the idea.

He divided my poor defenseless front hair into sections and twisted each one around some strange instrument, which, of course, I could only guess at—twisted it so hard and tight that my eyebrows were pulled up into an expression of permanent surprise. Meanwhile, the girl busied herself with an electric fan, trying its effectiveness on me from various angles. It was already pleasantly cool in the room, and I looked inquiringly at her.

"You see," she explained, "when it begins to get unbearably hot, all you have to do is tell me where it's burning you, and I'll turn the fan on the place."

"Sunset," I murmured, "'sunset and evening star and one clear call for me—'"

Monsieur surrounded each twist with some strange and scratchy substance, twining and pulling and packing it with absolutely no regard for my feelings, interposing its maddeningly rasping surface between my head and the twists.

"Asbestos," said the girl, pleasantly.

"Oh, Death, where is thy sting?" I sighed.

ANOTHER ATROCITY

And then by some mysterious means they attached that brutal machine above me to the twists; it seemed to have cup-like appliances that fitted over them. It felt as if I were suspended from the ceiling by the hair of my head and I never would have lived through it, had not Monsieur thoughtfully given me other things to think of. He introduced some mystic liquid into the cup-like affairs, and then turned on a switch. Electricity leaped to his bidding, and in no time at all the liquid was boiling merrily. I became conscious of a violent desire to go home. I thought of my hair, of the faithful friend it had been to me, of all the things it had done for me, of all the help it had been. I thought of all the happy hours we had spent together, my hair and I. I wondered if I should ever see it again. I grew lost in trying to decide what color wig I should have. . . .

Monsieur strolled casually out of the room, and the girl started to follow him.

"It will be all right for a while," she said, in answer to my wild look of entreaty. "When it starts to hurt, all you have to do is shout for me."

"Unaccustomed as I am to public shrieking," I began, but the heartless wretch had vanished.

There I sat, plunged in gloom. I don't suppose, looking back, that it was really so horrible. I should blithely go and have it done to-morrow; in fact, I quite look forward to repeating the operation just as soon as this wave wears off. But, you see, I know all about it now. Then, I didn't know just what was going to happen, and being the sort of person who is always half-way across my bridges long before I come to them, I sat there and imagined. When one goes to be permanently waved, one should lock one's imagination in the top bureau drawer. Its place is in the home.

The girl came presently, and played the electric fan on me—she didn't think it necessary, but I did,—and I tried not to think about the ache in (Continued on page 138)

The later summer rumors face the best hats with velvet; so does Lucie Hamar, using golden brown velvet. She also drapes a crown of golden brown liséré straw—and there are few people who care to attempt draping straw. The kolinsky cape is banded with strange bias bands of the fur. Kolinsky furs are to go about with us all summer, leaving their tails behind them; the furs on this page are from H. Jaechel

Gray is probably the most sophisticatedly innocent color—if it is a color; you can't tell about these neutral shades. Narrow gray Georgette crêpe shoulders and a beguiling attached ruffle are banded with squirrel; the wicked gray chrysanthemum straw hat has—it isn't playing fair—a gray organdy bow

Orchids were made mauve and peacocks blue for the sole purpose of suggesting a color scheme for this garden-hat of changeable taffeta. The edge is banded with a garden fence of white leghorn. Green, blue, and orchid silk flowers grow on crown and brim. The scarf of gray chiffon banded with chinchilla squirrel, ties, after the fashion of summer furs, with chiffon streamers; four hats on this page from Guy

The fact that it is black and white does not cramp the style of a hat; instead, it insures it against criticism. The white is Georgette crêpe; the black is a trimming of cherries. The cape is black and white, too; and its ermine is lined with white chiffon over satin

FASHION TAKES A NEW LEASE ON LINGERIE FROCKS

FOR several seasons past, the lingerie dress has politely stepped aside and gracefully yielded the limelight to the sports costume; but this season, with the return of laces, garden hats, and all things picturesque and graceful and feminine, the lingerie dress in all its phases regains the center of the stage. There are all varieties of these frocks, and each is lovelier than the other. Simple frocks of dimity, exquisite gowns of filet lace, and dainty affairs of chiffon all manage to be included under the heading of lingerie dresses this season.

MATERIAL CONSIDERATIONS

Perhaps the most popular material for both afternoon and evening gowns is organdy, and whether it is white or one of the soft pastel shades, it is charming. One most unusual evening gown which has recently appeared is of black organdy trimmed with tiny ruffles of black Valenciennes lace and hung over a slip of black silk to which are applied colored silk flowers. Embroidered batiste ranks next to organdy in popularity; there are colored batistes embroidered in white, or white embroidered in color, and they are equally chic. Those women who delight in quaint frocks will revel in the dimities that are appearing this season; they may be had in all sorts of colors and all conditions of old-fashioned patterns. And then there are the afternoon frocks of printed chiffon, which are to be some of the most successful adventures of our summer life. Printed chiffon may be had in many exquisite and unusual patterns, and the material is so lovely in itself that it requires very little trimming. There are afternoon frocks, too, of voiles and marquises in every imaginable color,—oh, yes, these are known as lingerie dresses, also. These voile and marquise frocks may be made on lines simple to the point of severity, yet still retain their delightfully summery effect.

In Paris, too, lingerie frocks are flourishing in the warm spring air. Muslin frocks appear here and there like frail summer flowers. There is one of dull rose muslin embroidered with bright blue silk, collared and frilled with blue muslin and girdled with black patent leather. Some muslin frocks are straight and slim, loosely girdled, and of almost a severe simplicity. Striped muslins are also used and are extremely chic. These striped frocks are made on chemise lines, loosely belted with leather, satin, muslin, or even with sashes of knitted silk or wool. Crêpon frocks, too, are making their appearance; there is a particularly charming one of white cotton crêpon embroidered in green, with green silk tassels dangling from its belt of black patent leather and bright green silk.

AS TRIMMING GOES

As for the trimming of lingerie frocks, it is mostly of lace,—somehow lace seems naturally to belong on such delicate backgrounds. Embroidery, too, has been proved an appropriate and practical trimming. It is on these frocks that sashes return to us,—sashes formed of

Any Soft, Lacy, Utterly Feminine Frock

Steps into the Limelight of Fashion

*By their neck-lines shall ye know them, the frocks of 1917. That one on the left is the beginning of a frock of white-embroidered blue batiste shaded by a white organdy hat heaped with daisies. lengths of heavy silk ribbon finished with deep fringe at the ends; in fact, one can scarcely imagine a modern lingerie frock without an attendant sash of some variety. Some frocks have dainty collars of embroidered batiste; a collar is more becoming, perhaps, although the frock without a collar—with just the outline of a collar—is very smart and very new. In a word, in lingerie frocks as in all too few other things, one may gratify one's own personal taste and be sure of success.

That new collarless neck-line is one of the many pleasant features of the frock sketched at the left on this page. It is of delft blue batiste embroidered with white and girdled with a cord of white grosgrain ribbon. Pearl buttons fasten the frock in back and at the wrists,—these lingerie frocks have a practical way of fastening with either pearl buttons or buttons covered with their own material, out of deference to the laundry. The hat—oh, a lingerie frock simply must have a hat in keeping—is of white organdy, heaped with yellow and white daisies. Black velvet ribbon edges the brim, and streamers of black velvet ribbon tie under the chin most engagingly.

Another version of the new, rather high neck-line is sketched at the right on this page; this time, the line is nearer the base of the neck and opens in a V in front. The frock, a simple one-piece affair destined for summer mornings, is of white linen crash trimmed with heavy white Cluny lace. The bodice is almost entirely of lace, and more lace defines the yoke on the skirt and appears below the draperies at the sides. The skirt is uneven at the bottom; the sides are longer than the front. The accompanying hat is Chinese in shape; it is of white organdy, trimmed only with stitching done in bright green heavy floss, and with two tassels of green silk which hang over one side of the brim straight as the plumb-line.

THE UBIQUITOUS ORGANDY

At the upper left on the opposite page is one of the organdy frocks we are to see so much. It is of sheer white organdy trimmed with wide bands of cream lace, narrow white grosgrain ribbon, and a knot of white daisies. The dress is made over a white organdy slip, which is also lace-trimmed. From its low round crown of the white organdy hat spreads an umbrella-shaped brim, with a daisy at the tip of each wire "rib." The edge is frilled with narrow Valenciennes lace, and lace and black velvet ribbon band the crown. At the upper right of the same page is a simple frock of pale blue dimity trimmed with ruffles of blue dimity embroidered in white. The collar is of embroidered white batiste edged with a narrow plaited ruffle of white net, and the girdle of crushed raspberry velvet ribbon ties at one side and falls nearly to the end of the skirt. The hat is of natural color Tuscan straw, weighed down at the sides with white cherry blossoms. A black velvet bow is perched precariously at one side.

In the middle of the same page is an afternoon gown of white chiffon and deep écreu filet lace. The neck is as high as it is possible for it to be without a collar—it was Callot who started that idea, you remember. The short sleeves are finished with lace. A wide girdle of lace defines the waist-line, and a band of lace runs from the lace yoke to the hem at the back. Over the underskirt of white chiffon hangs an overskirt which consists of a wide band of filet lace attached to a full shirred yoke of chiffon. The large garden hat is of sapphire blue chrysanthemum straw trimmed with bachelor buttons of the same shade, which looked as if they had been casually, but oh, how artfully, dropped there.

RARE PRINTS

At the lower left on page 59 is an example of the charm of printed chiffon frocks. It is an afternoon gown of white chiffon, printed with big black chrysanthemums, and its skirt, following the example of several new skirts, is shorter in front than it is on the sides. The front panel turns under at the bottom. The tight sleeves are laced with narrow black satin ribbons, and the girdle is black satin ribbon. The large hat is of black chip straw edged with a narrow piping of white velvet, and a bow of white velvet trims the front of the high straight crown.

At the lower right is a youthful frock of white French voile, finely checked in deep orchid. The collar and cuffs are of sheer white organdy embroidered in white and edged with a narrow piping of old-blue organdy, and the bodice is really nothing but a short straight coat which fastens in the front with ball buttons covered with white faille. The broad sash of white faille is finished with fringe—that's one of the newest things a sash can do. The large garden hat is of deep purple horsehair braid trimmed with velvet flowers and foliage in green, purple, and black. From the edge of the brim falls a narrow ruffle of purple tulle.

VOILA LINEN! AND WHILE YOU ARE AT IT, BEHOLD GINGHAM TOO, BECAUSE THAT IS DOING

FROCKS FROM STEIN AND BLAINE

A frock like this feigns indifference, and that's the charm of linen; it has an informal "I don't care" quality all its own. Just witness this yellow handkerchief linen frock, with that carefully careless collar of white linen, and those white cuffs trimmed with pearl buttons that don't care whether they button or not. And those white linen bands over the shoulder—they are there just because they want to be

There is nothing left undone about this frock, and it doesn't have to worry about having done any of the things that it should not have done, either. The white linen skirt buttons firmly on to the blue linen blouse with white pearl buttons, and that blouse itself is securely strapped with white linen. Even the deep white linen cuffs came in for some precautionary buttons that keep them where they should be kept

For ever so long we have looked upon gingham as we do upon the lily,—as an emblem of utter guilelessness. Didn't those girls with a "rustic woodland air" always wear a pink and white checked gingham dress? And think of what it's doing now!—going about with white piqué, and wearing patent leather belts, and pearl buttons, and an air of sang-froid

The front is really a more or less hypothetical case, and probably wouldn't recognize us if we met it, so we can talk about this frock behind its back all we like. We like the long lines of it, that's certain, and we're very glad to know that the underdress, and the piping around that long slash down the overdress, are tan linen. Yes, the long sash-belt is tan linen, too

WHAT THE KNITTING HABIT LEADS TO

Since Every Woman Must Knit, Either for the Soldier's Benefit or for Her Own, an Avalanche of Knitting-bags Has Descended upon Us

(Above) Some people are so devoted to their faithful little bags that they never leave them. This pair is attached by ribbons to a huge feather fan

That she who walks may knit, there are gay chintz bags nailed to the handles of walking-sticks; one must have one's stroll, and the soldiers must have their socks,—thus one kills two birds with one bag

The variety of bags only comes to an end when imagination gives out. There is one bag of oyster white silk embroidered with peacocks with proudly even egotistically, spread tails, which are done in true-to-nature colors

One of the most charming bags that ever held an embryonic sweater is Mrs. James Otis Hinkley's bag of lavender silk, the top of which is covered with rosebuds where in between. As one man said, "Well, they've used everything to carry their knitting in but a horse's nose-bag."

The bags range from the most elaborate variety to the strictly business-like sort. There are wonderful creations of imported silks and satins, some of which are embroidered until scarcely an inch of the original fabric shows, and others of which rely entirely upon the beauty and color of their material for their charm. Frills of fine lace are frequently used, and one bag carried by Mrs. Walter Witherbee of New York is of oyster white silk embroidered with peacocks with proudly spread tails done in true-to-nature colors. Another bag carried by Baroness des correctly neutral war-time shades. To-day, women continue to knit madly,—but with a difference. A riot of colored worsteds has broken out in the midst of the sombre yarns that are being made into warm and useful articles for the soldiers.—for our own soldiers, these days, and occasionally this knitter of socks and mufflers takes up a still gayner ball of wool and turns to making gay sweaters for her own adornment.

The fad, of course, has led to such an avalanche of work-bags that at the smart resorts one is well-nigh bewildered at the startling colors and amazing shapes of these bags which hang upon every feminine arm. They accompany their owners from the morning trip to the beach to moving pictures in the evening, and every-

THE HIGH CEREMONIAL of MARRIAGE in NORWAY

IT must surely be counted among the advantages of marrying a Norwegian, that one learns, as may be learned in no other way, the intimate family life of these descendants of the vikings. It is a wonderful thing, quite beyond the experience of an American, the intensity of the Norwegian feeling of blood relationship. "Thicker than water" could convey no idea of it. It is thicker than the earth itself. The Norwegian word soskinde, for which we have no equivalent, since it includes both brothers and sisters, seems the fitting expression of the solidly cemented unit formed by the children of each family.

One of my most arresting encounters with this family feeling was at the wedding of a near relative of my husband, which took place not long after our arrival in Norway. The wedding was in the country, and the journey thither and the picturesque festivities which accompanied the ceremony were a revelation to the casual American mind.

On this journey to the bride's home, we stopped at the home of other relatives, and there I learned much of Norwegian wedding costumes,

Not the Hour of the Day, but the Greatness of the Occasion, Determines the Costume of the Wedding Guest at This Three-day Festival past and present. It came about by the fact that my trunks were stowed in the garret for convenience and all the young women of the family came up to assist in the unpacking.

WE LEARN OF WEDDING-GARMENTS

It then occurred to me that this was the moment to seek expert advice as to what I should wear at the great wedding. What I had previously gathered from different households as to Norwegian etiquette of dress had been far from clear, so I decided to use this opportunity for finding out accurately just what costume, in this adopted country, suited what special hours. We all climbed to the garret, the trunks were dragged into the clear light of a great north window, and unpacking began. Now, as I had never by any chance succeeded in wearing the right clothes on any of the festive occasions at which we had been present in Bergen or Christiania, I had concluded that I had no right clothes and I cordially disliked all that I had. I have a particularly pained recollection of a dinner at eight o'clock, in Bergen when, carefully eschewing all tulle and sequin ephemera as too unsubstantial, I wore a white satin evening dress with garlands of red silk roses and considered myself taking a safe course, only to find all the other women present clad in severe high-necked costumes of dark rich colored silks, with exquisite collars and cuffs of fine white needlework.

The wedding was to begin at four in the afternoon and to continue, after the manner of Norwegian weddings, for three days and nights. I accordingly began my inquiry by showing the costume which I had chosen for the church ceremony, a one-toned costume of taupe silk and bronze lace, very conservative, with gloves and hat and shoes all to match. This, as a creation,

It does seem at first glance as if we should rise to our feet and render the "Star-Spangled Banner," but it really isn't an American flag that the lady is holding out for our admiration; it's her new evening wrap,—though it's almost as successful in waking up America as a flag would be. It is of white chiffon,—because summer evenings are so apt to be cool, it's thoughtfully made of a double thickness of chiffon—and those broad bands are of black velvet ribbon. The wearer thrusts her arms through slits in the sides and then lets things take their course; our chic wraps simply couldn't think of cramping their style with fastenings

One is always much more deeply interested in the things that are half concealed than in the things that are in plain view; that's why these transparent evening wraps were invented. This one all begins with a great shawl collar of old-blue taffeta which ties in the front with long slim taffeta bands, which extend almost to the utmost ends of things. And then comes the wrap itself, which is of black tulle, doubled and finely plaited. But the thing that makes it what it is to-day is the wide frill of old-blue taffeta, pinked all along its edge, which winds itself about the middle of the wrap and finishes it at the bottom

A NEEDLESS BIT OF FUR, A NEEDED CLOUD OF

In the dim dark ages before woman became advanced, an evening wrap was just something to keep one warm; now it's one of the main reasons why men leave home. This one is a mixture of ermine and white tulle,—oh, these summer evening wraps dash from fur to tulle without even stopping to think about it. Directly after the ermine collar is over, there is a deep flounce of white tulle, which turns under a big puff just where a second flounce begins; that second flounce turns under at the bottom and is fastened to the foundation slip of white silk net,—yes, just straight lengths of white silk net are underneath the whole affair

Black Chantilly lace is engaging much of our attention, this summer; in fact, if we go as far as Miss Dryden tells us, we shall be simply wrapped up in it. This wrap is of black Chantilly lace, lined with a mere nothing of black tulle. Bands of black fox edge the wrap and define its so-called sleeves, and the black fox is lined with shell pink taffeta—oh, there are more things in Heaven and evening wraps than are dreamed of in your philosophy. Long black silk tassels hang from the sleeves and trail lazily along the floor,—one can accomplish much more daring things in the evening, you know, than one can in broad daylight

THE WOMAN of FASHION SHOULDERS HER GUN

New Conditions Have Given a New Popularity and a Hitherto Unknown Smartness to the Old Sport of Trap-shooting; and Logical Results Are New Shooting Costumes and Accessories

© Underwood & Underwood

One of the leading promoters of trap-shooting is Mrs. Belle G. Earle, who gives instruction at Lakewood and Newport

IT would seem that all America is to become accustomed to the smell of powder. While the men are busy practicing with rifle and heavy artillery to annihilate the enemy, the women are at work with shotguns learning how to annihilate records in trap-shooting. For a number of years this sport has been quite a favorite with men and a few women have taken it up, but it was not until this spring that it came into general favor, doubtless through the widespread interest in firearms.

At Lakewood there have been recently a number of interesting shoots in which women contended. The shooting has taken place at the Laurel House Gun Club, which is advantageously located at the edge of the lake in the midst of fragrant pine woods. It is always desirable to have the traps located at the edge of water or, failing that, at the edge of a cleared space, so that no unwarned passers-by may run in danger from spent shots.

TRAP-SHOOTING AT LAKEWOOD

The shooting at Lakewood has been under the direction of Mrs. Belle G. Earle, who instructs the women shooters and who, herself, is an excellent amateur shot. In the photograph at the upper left on this page, Mrs. Earle demonstrates the correct pose for a straight shot. The photograph at the upper right on this page shows the woman's squad at Lakewood in a shoot which took place a short time ago. Mrs. Earle is pictured at the left. Among the young women who have been especially active in this sport at Lakewood are Miss Peggy Lynch, Miss Marion Gilford, Miss Lentilhon Gilford, Mrs. Hamilton

Hill, Mrs. Frank X. Sadlier, Miss Almy Gilford, Miss Adelaide Romaine, and Miss Augusta de Forest. Arrangements have been made for Mrs. Earle to give instructions in trap-shooting this summer at Red Top Inn, Newport.

Interesting shoots have also taken place at the Whippany River Club, Morristown, New Jersey, and at Piping Rock, the club is equipped with traps which are operated for the benefit of members. Among the well-known New York women who often shoot here is Mrs. George F. Baker, Jr., who is very skillful in handling her gun.

For several seasons past society women at the Greenbrier, at White Sulphur Springs, have interested themselves in trap-shooting, and during May and June of this season amateur shoots are being held there with great success. The Greenbrier traps are located at some distance from the hotel, affording a delightful walk on spring or autumn mornings, and many women gather there to enjoy the sport and to perfect themselves in shooting. Mrs. Jean H. E. St. Cyr has always been one of the most active shots at the Greenbrier and always spends much time at the traps with Mr. St. Cyr on her visits at White Sulphur.

Pinehurst, North Carolina, probably devotes more attention to trap-shooting than any other resort in the south. Pinehurst lies in the center of a great hunting country, and many of the sportsmen who go bird-shooting there have had their training at the Pinehurst traps. Mr. John Philip Sousa, one of the best known amateurs in this country, journeys to Pinehurst for the opening tournament every season, and he has been one of the leaders in establishing the sport.

A S S E E N b y H I M

NEVER has the town been more attractive than in these last days, when we are supposed to bid it a long farewell. However, now that we are not traveling overseas and New York is our Paris and our London rolled into one, the entire year is an open season. It is true that blinds and shades are down, doorways are boarded, and the seal of the private protection police is seen plastered on outside windows all through the court end. The hotels, however, are crowded, the majority of the playhouses will probably keep open, and the shops are attractive with the bustle and excitement of a phenomenal year; it seems that all traditions have been swept aside. Our summer residents are many, and those who come from other cities readily accustom themselves to New York, which fact they demonstrate by making themselves at home at once.

THE PERSONAL INFLUENCE

It is to be noticed that those who have lived elsewhere, especially those who have lived in the middle west and the south—or even so close to New York as Philadelphia have the home instinct highly developed. The house of the New Yorker too often suggests a hotel, or, if a great establishment, a species of museum and hostelry combined. One of the landmarks of Fifth Avenue is the home of Mr. Henry C. Frick, the Pittsburgh steel magnate. A New York woman said to me this year, "How I love to go to the Fricks; their house has the true home atmosphere." In the Frick residence the Fragonards are priceless treasures, the Renaissance room is truly impressive, and the library luxuriously appointed. There is nothing under glass, nothing is hoarded; each treasure is a living member of the household. The library, with its comfortable chairs, and, in those last chilly spring days, its big fire, has its tables piled with magazines and flowers. The French envoys made their home here while they were in New York, and Mr. Vincent Astor turned over his residence to the British commission.

I wish I could say that the homes of other wealthy New Yorkers were homes indeed, but many of their houses have not the atmosphere of being lived in. One would be just as comfortable living in the Grand Central Station. It only takes a quarter of an hour to give a home atmosphere to even so cheerless a spot as a hotel sitting-room. A few photographs, flowers, books, magazines, a personal touch,—and the room becomes "livable." I can even make a camp tent suggestive of home—and with nothing but the smallest bit of impedimenta allowable under the strictest military rule.

IN THE SUMMER—WHERE?

Here we are with the park a vision of early blooms. The lilacs have faded, the wistaria is going, but all along the drives in the suburbs the climbing roses are riotous. Here is Riverside Drive, a superb avenue with the Hudson and the Palisades in full view, severe, rather than picturesque, perhaps, but still inspiring. Here is Long Island, here is Westchester, and here are the woods and hills of New Jersey and the many roads which lead eastward along the Sound. Plenty of inns there are, too, and excellent ones. One can take a new drive every day and still enjoy a variety of scenery. Later we shall be preparing for Newport, which is to have an extraordinary season, and for Southampton, which has never been so gay as it is to be this year. The resorts nearer to town, too, may expect a crowded season, for many of us need to be in constant touch with the metropolis since the war.

Perhaps we have let our ardor

This Is to Be a Summer of Unprecedented Happenings, What with Most of Our Men in Uniforms, and More of Them Training to Wear Uniforms, and All of Us Staying on This Side of the Ocean and Doing Our Bit carry us away, but then we are an enthusiastic and excitable people. I agree with the Canadian who took us to task for too much flag waving, spread-eagle oratory, and standing in cabarets while the "jass" band plays the national anthem. Certain enterprising shopkeepers even have the flag embroidered on shoddy articles of attire. Of course these are cheap and trifling things, but even then they should not be allowed any more than this indiscriminate playing of the anthem and introducing it at dinner at restaurants and having it bawled by raucous rag time singers. It is an anthem, a hymn, and as sacred as any in the Psalter. However, there are certain permissible little touches by which we may show our patriotism, such as the use of bluettes and other small blue blooms in conjunction with scarlet geraniums and daisies and other white flowers in the window-boxes. Again, the tiny corsage bouquets of red, white, and blue blooms worn this spring were pretty. The hurried weddings (and these I predicted would be the vogue) of our young militiamen about to be called to service to the girls they had to leave behind them, had a touch of romance. The use of a large flag as a canopy at the marriage of Roland Harriman and Miss Gladys Fries in St. Thomas's Church was a happy thought. The interior of St. Thomas is cold, and the bright colors of our flag had a dramatic and vivifying effect in keeping with the hour.

LIFE IN A MILITARY CAMP

I would, in passing, like to prate a bit about matters military. If there were to be no active military life, camps and military training would still lead in popular favor. We have read the lesson of preparedness and we shall always be prepared in future. As early as May, arrangements were completed for the Plattsburg camp in the east. The book counters in the shops were filled with manuals, books, and pamphlets concerning soldiery. Many of the great department shops, and one especially which took the initiative even as early as March, had attractive advertising booklets, one of which, "The Rookies Recall," is a useful publication and I have no doubt will be sent to any one who applies for it by mail. Another big shop which has just moved into its new quarters, has an entire floor given over to military equipment, and there are various depots all over New York, and no doubt other cities have them, too, where many of the cheaper articles may be obtained. I believe that there is no better book of instruction for the amateur than the Plattsburg Manual which was published recently and which is quite up-to-date. In matters of clothes, it has few suggestions as to what to take, but it has many other valuable hints. In the "Rookies Recall" there is a most sensible opening sentence which puts the whole matter of camp equipment in a nutshell, "Take what you need, but remember that the more you have, the bigger the nuisance. Camp life gives you no bureau drawers, and while they may let you wear out your suitcase by dragging it from under your cot (you do have a cot and mattress the first few weeks) the less in it, the easier to find the missing mate to complete your last pair of socks."

GETTING DOWN TO A MINIMUM

Of course, if one attends an official training camp, the United States will furnish the uniforms, subsistence, and transportation, but it is recommended that whenever possible, men shall buy and keep their own uniforms. These consist of breeches, leggings, flannel shirt, blouse, coat, campaign hat and cord and well broken-in marching shoes of the regulation kind. The "Recall" suggests six pairs of woolen socks and four changes of light woolen underwear in preference to cotton. I would also add to this a large piece of flannel to wrap about the abdomen. This is done by the soldiery in India, and our summer climate is as torrid and fickle as that of any "coral strand." Other things recommended are all very well in their way, but I do not see how one can get them all in the small space allowed. However, it is wise to have an extra shirt, an extra pair of breeches, and an extra pair of shoes. Bandanna handkerchiefs are suggested because they are easily washed. I have never used bandanna handkerchiefs, so I can not be enthusiastic about them. Two pairs of pajamas are not too much, because one can crowd these into no space at all. The shops have special toilet-kits, shaving-kits, sewing-kits, and simple medicine-kits. But Plattsburg, or any village or town, or even settlement, in this country, is not a wilderness, there is surely a drug store—the name for that emporium in any collection of twelve houses—where one can get a package of safety razor blades, and where simple toilet articles and remedies may be obtained. The suggestion, however, of a small bottle of iodine, a roll of surgeon's plaster, and a small box of absorbent cotton is excellent, as these take up but little room. A fountain pen, of course, one can not live without. Post-cards one can always get at a village, and as to the soap, tooth-brushes, tooth-paste, and comb and brush, what self-respecting man would go anywhere without them? One should certainly add a nail-brush and one of the small shaving mirrors. I believe there is a kind which one attaches anywhere and to almost anything. The Plattsburg regulations insist that a man's boots be neat, that he be clean shaven.

A DAUGHTER OF THE GODS

*A sybarite, with glowing golden eyes,
Beside the goldfish bowl my Persian lies,
Priest of old Pasht, unfathomably wise!*

*All that once Isis knew, and Ashtaroth,
The wisdom of Anubis, and his pride
Look through those night-black slits . . .
Do you recall*

*Old lives outlived, when all of Egypt brought Tribute of fish and milk? Or when at noon
On the cool marbles of the inner shrine
Deliberately you cleansed your glossy fur?
Or when, great Egypt fallen into dust,
You came disdainfully to Manx by sea
With the Phoenician traders bartering tin?
Or when the paynim Sultan yielded chest
On chest of jewels for you and thereby Made Whittington Lord Mayor of London Town?
God, king, and priest they held you in old time.
Do you recall, O plaything pet of mine?*

Mine, did I say? Mine only just so long As she shall choose to barter cream for song Purred in her throat. Mine only just so long!

MISS MARY CASS CANFIELD

Miss Mary Cass Canfield, who is the daughter of Mrs. Frank Gray Griswold, played the part of Héloïse, the fiancée, in the pantomime, "Le Mariage d'Héloïse." Her dress was of white organdy, and the head-dress was a quaint veil of tulle, attached to a little cap of bright flowers; she carried a bouquet of the same kind of flowers. This pantomime was staged by Mlle. Gabrielle Dorziat and Mr. Henry Caroderville and was given at the home of Mrs. Vincent Astor on Wednesday, April twenty-fifth, for the benefit of L'Union des Arts, which corresponds in France to the Actors' Fund Benefit in America

THE STRANGE PARADOX OF FREEDOM

To Renounce a Law Is Merely to Take Up a New Burden of Complex Responsibility, and He Who Will Not Have One Master, Shall Have Many

CURIOUSLY enough, the important thing about free verse is its lack of freedom; for it is bound to be free. And the end of its freedom is this: that it is not free to be bound. It is forbidden to be verse; for then it would not be free verse. The free new poet dare not avail himself of those traditional adornments, the sensuous witchery of metre, the formal charm of ordered numbers, the echoing chimes of rime. He must renounce those chains, although they be jeweled and golden; he must forego the beautiful thunder of Milton, the stately harmonies of Spenser and Tennyson, the delirious dance of Swinburne.

"FILLED, as with shadow of sound, with the pulse of invisible feet."

He is quite welcome to transcend the Masters in all else, but he must not envy their obedience. He can only surpass them, for he may not follow. He "can not sing those old songs."

THERE is in every freedom whatsoever this element of alternative renunciation. People used to say that the liberty to bind oneself was the one liberty worth having. That was a silly phrase; for whether or not the liberty to bind oneself be worth having, it is at all events the only liberty which exists. There is none other conceivable. If a man is free to go east, then he is not free to go west. He can remain free to go either way only by standing still and not going anywhere. He can do this, or that, or nothing, but he can not do both. That is Liberty as it is in fact, inevitable and unalterable; and he may as well make the best of it. He can not go in all directions—at least, not with any personal comfort. Nor will he improve his situation by continually changing his course. As an advanced modern thinker, he probably regards either one of these as a happy solution of the problem. Going in all directions he calls Broad-mindedness; and going in every direction in turn he calls Progress. His arrival is not yet officially reported.

BUT short of these open absurdities, there is in our contemporary mental fashion a too great insistence upon the merely negative side of liberty, a fatuous evasion of choice. We think of Liberty as the liberty to break some law. But breaking a law is a queer thing; it is like breaking a mirror, an act very justly considered symbolical of misfortune. For when we have broken it, we make the uncomfortable discovery that every separate fragment is a law no less, so that for fear of one law, we must now submit to many. The old waltz had one step to learn; the modern waltz has a dozen, including that one; and then a dozen more. And yet we confusedly think of the new dance as freer, because it offers more alternatives. It may be better in every other way, but it is obviously not so free. An informal party does not mean that every woman may dress as she pleases; it means that every woman, however she may dress, will feel dressed inappropriately. The free-thinker is not free to believe in any creed; he is forbidden to believe in any creed, and he is bound by scientific and ethical dogmas without number. The free-lover is not free to love; he is only not free to marry, nor to have his family and his home. In these things as in all else, the freedom is all on the side of order and a plain convention. For to avoid convention does not evade the consequences, and he who will not have one master shall have many.

THE men who made this nation understood the matter well. The freedom they sought and found was the freedom to choose whom they would obey. They meant by Liberty, the liberty to make the law. They rebelled against the ruler, but not against the rule. They knew that escape from set rules and forms is but the boast of the maniac in his dungeon, and that not without meaning do wise men speak of laying down the law; for the act is in truth a laying down of the burden of complex responsibility. They knew that there is no tyranny like the tyranny of unbridled circumstance, and that there is no slave so abject as the anarchist.

Mrs. George J. Gould has done her bit—in fact, a great deal more than her bit—for the Red Cross. For its benefit, she gave a tea and a private exhibition of motion pictures at Georgian Court, her Lakewood home. The pictures were most interesting, for Mrs. Gould and her daughters, Miss Edith and little Miss Gloria, posed for them. In "The Enchanted Fountain," the moving picture from which this is a scene, Miss Gloria played the leading rôle. It was a charming little fairy tale, taken around the fountain and the lake on the estate. The fairy of the fountain was played by a real live movie actress

After "The Enchanted Fountain," an even more interesting thing happened. There were moving pictures of Mrs. Gould, who was a whole fashion fête in herself, for she posed in a rapid succession of chic costumes,—yes, every costume and every pose were just as effective as those in this photograph. The basque-like closeness of the coat and the simplicity and the tucks of the skirt—those are the reasons why the suit is so smart. The hat lends just the right touch to the silhouette

The pictures of Mrs. Gould were all taken at Georgian Court, and in them she not only illustrated her remarkable talent for wearing smart costumes, but demonstrated what an accomplished sportswoman she is. The camera tells the tale of how thoroughly at home she is behind the wheel of her motor, which she drives with exceptional skill. A nearer view of her toque and motor coat appears directly opposite

Guns have no terrors for Mrs. Gould; the camera proves that she knows just what to expect of them. Her hunting suit of dark green covert cloth is absolutely practical, utterly correct, and yet so thoroughly becoming that every woman who saw its picture wanted to go right home that very minute and have one just like it

The moving picture had its nautical moments, too. They took place in the sunken gardens of Georgian Court, and in deference to them Mrs. Gould wore a boating costume which consisted of a white serge skirt and a white duck blouse collared with navy blue. The blouse laced over the hips to give a becomingly close line

This is the way the motor costume that first dawned upon our horizon across the page looks when Mrs. Gould alights from the motor. The loosely belted coat is of gray cloth with broad bands of chinchilla, and the little hat is embroidered in one of those endless and beginning-less patterns that are so chic

The terrace of Georgian Court formed a most becoming background for Mrs. Gould and her frock of black taffeta, embroidered in rose. Her kolinsky cape bears no tails; therefore it's exceedingly smart; all those little tails that furs have known so well lately are just beginning to wag themselves out of fashion

(Left) When the architecture of a house is derived from the manors of Tudor England, the garden pool may appropriately suggest the moat of feudal days. Such a placing has the added advantage of bringing the pool close enough to mirror the house and its surrounding trees in the still water. At the country place of Mr. George Dupont Pratt at Glen Cove, the hewn stone which forms the material of the house and the facing of the pool, is used to excellent advantage as a background for an admirably arranged planting of evergreens and ivy. This house, of which Trowbridge and Ackerman were the architects, was the prize winner in a country house competition in the year of its building. The garden is the work of James L. Greenleaf, landscape architect

WHILE the Independents were making merry in the Grand Central Palace with the first "great American Salon," with all its two-thousand-fold mediocrity, a number of the real painters of America were holding exhibitions at galleries of more modest proportions.

The Knoedler Galleries housed a small collection of paintings by Cecilia Beaux, including some recent portraits of unusual interest. Notable among these was a sensitive and keenly interpretive portrait of Miss Flora Whitney, daughter of Mr. Harry Payne Whitney. Miss Beaux merits honor not only for her art, but for the generosity which donated one of the excellent canvases in this exhibition to be sold at auction for the benefit of French artists and their families.

AN ENGLISH PORTRAIT PAINTER

The Reinhardt Galleries introduced to the American public the English painter, H. Harris Brown. The exhibition, comprising twenty-five portraits, showed this artist a painter of no mean gift, but of somewhat uneven merit, capable of such vigorous and vital work as "The Young Piper," of such sensitive interpretation as the portrait of the Honorable Diana Lister, but also guilty of dreary banalities, such as the portrait of Mrs. Frank Pierce Frazier, flanked by two very badly painted dogs.

A pupil of Robert Tony-Fleury and of Bouguereau, Brown was long associated with the group of painters (including Burne-Jones, Watts, and Sargent) who exhibited at the New Gallery in London, and his work has marked affinity with that of the Pre-Raphaelite masters. This tendency is particularly noticeable in the portraits of Mrs. G. Allen Peabody and of Mrs. Henry Blossom in the present exhibition. This artist was a member of the old Royal Society of Portrait Painters in London and is also a member of the new English National Society of Portrait Painters. He has been honored by the Société des Artistes Français, and he is included in the group of foreign artists whose work is represented in the Luxembourg Museum. At his best, he is a man of clear and original vision and of excellent technique.

The Folsom Galleries had on view a series of paintings of California by Paul Harvey. Much of the romance and the color of southern California have found their way into these canvases, which are painted with the fresh enthusiasm of an artist who loves the thing he paints and feels, himself, the emotion which he would arouse in others. Towering eucalyptus trees, distant mountains, and the flowery fields and brilliant sky of California are presented in Harvey's well-composed and ably painted works.

ART NATIVE TO THE SOIL

Exhibitions of miscellaneous works by contemporary American painters filled both the Macbeth and the Montross Galleries during late April and early May. Both these exhibitions were composed of sane excellent works by painters of acknowledged standing.

Among the thirty men who made up the exhibition at the Macbeth Galleries were Charles W. Hawthorne, who contributed two Portuguese girls, Childe Hassam, whose "Appledore Pool" was a glow of jewel-like color, Daingerfield with his serene and delightful landscapes, Charles H. Davis with his smiling skies and green fields, and such other old friends as William Ritschel, Albert Groll, Emil Carlsen, and Robert Henri.

The Montross exhibition included a number of works by notable American painters who have died within the past few years. The strange genius of the late Albert P. Ryder appeared in his well-known "Macbeth and the Witches," "Moonlight-Marine," and "Resurrection." With these was shown an interesting portrait of Ryder himself, painted by Kenneth Hayes Miller. "Fish and a Green Bowl" represented a characteristic phase of the art of the late William M. Chase, and "Autumn," the full-length figure of a woman, soft and rich in color, was from the brush of the late John LaFarge.

Among the other artists who joined in this excellent exhibition were J. Francis

BILLIE BURKE AND HER DAUGHTER

Last season, Billie Burke appeared in "Gloria's Romance," a moving picture in serial form,—and that was the last that was seen of her. We have been anxiously awaiting her reappearance, either on the stage or the screen, and we will have to wait even longer. This summer, she is going to pose for a new moving picture,—but that is just an interlude; the really important thing is that she will return to the stage in a new play early in September, under the management of her husband, Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr. If vast audiences are sighing in vain for Billie Burke, it is because little Miss Florenz Patricia is playing the lead just now, with Billie Burke cast for a "mother" part. It is interesting to know that the setting for this domestic drama is in Hastings-on-Hudson, in the country home of Mrs. Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr.

A YEAR ago—in the rainy, rainy, rainy month of June—the Third Training Regiment was ordered north from Plattsburg to defend the Rutland Railroad against an imaginary raid from troops across the border. One day, after a heavy hike from Beekmantown, we encamped on a hillside near Sciota—a place that ribald rookies called “Sciatica.” We had pitched our tents, and had just begun to ditch them, when there came a sudden cloudburst and all the waters of the world were poured upon us. The hillside soon transformed itself into a waterfall; and the tents of L Company were swept away upon the flood.

WATER AND THOUGHTS

While this was happening, my bunkie and myself lay huddled together in our pup-tent and tried to smoke cheap cigarettes. The pup-tent leaked—as pup-tents always do—and it was difficult to keep our cigarettes alight. Water oozed up from the marshy mud in which we lay; and the torrent pouring down the hillside flowed serenely through the tent until it had soaked not merely us but all of our belongings. We were used to being wet; but now we faced the prospect of never, never being able to get dry again. For a long time we lay there side by side, with the water slushing over us, and smoked, and said no word. But both of us were thinking; and, at last, my bunkie spoke.

“Queer thing! Corporal,” said he,—“If we ever get home again and talk about to-day, we’ll think that it was merely funny. We’ll forget the hell, and call it an adventure.”

Another cloud collapsed above us, and crushed our tiny tent beneath a ton of rain. We wallowed out from underneath the ruins.

“Coming back next year?” I asked derisively.

“Not for a thousand dollars.”

“I’ll bet you a hundred that you will.”

“I don’t dare take you,” said my bunkie very wisely,—“A year from now,

Memory Is the Finest Artist in the World; with Rosemary in Our Hands, We Pay Just Tribute to a “Genius for Remembering”

By CLAYTON HAMILTON

Lionel Barrymore, John Barrymore, and Constance Collier are shining in “Peter Ibbetson,” the dramatist of which managed to convey du Maurier’s story from the bookshelf to the boards without spilling much of its charm.

the whole damn thing may look like nothing but a blooming lark.”

A year has passed; and the prophecy of my philosophic comrade has already been fulfilled. I am writing now beneath a roof; and, even out of doors there is no rain at all—but oh, for a moment of that delightful deluge on the hillside of Sciota! . . . To controvert a famous phrase of Dante’s,—there is no greater joy than to remember, in some comfortable time, a misery foregone. . . .

The most undaunted idealist and by far the finest artist in the world is Memory. The normal mind, reviewing past experience, forgets the non-essential and recalls the things that count. This, of course, is the primary function of art,—the function of selection. But Memory performs, with equal ease, the second and more technical activity of art,—the function of arranging choice details in accordance with an intelligible pattern. The surest way for any mind to accomplish the miracle of transmuting experience into art is to run away from actuality and then look back upon it over an intervening hiatus of space and time. All of us are born far-sighted; and distance lends enchantment to our view. We see more easily what is behind us than what is still about us.

THE GLAMOR OF THE PAST

The only real reason why youth must be regarded as the most glorious period of life is that it seems to be so when we grow old enough to look back upon it. The boy of twenty does not deem himself more happy than the man of forty; but the man of forty is luckier in this,—that he can remember fondly the time when he was twenty, and the boy cannot. No man is competent to realize the present: only a genius can attempt to realize the future: but any man can realize the past, and his own past is the only poem that he absolutely understands.

It is pertinent, in this connection, to record the fact that so impeccable a

Marie Jackson-Stuart did great things with the title rôle of "Granny Maumee," which formed one-third of the bill so ably presented by the Negro Players literary artist as Robert Louis Stevenson was accustomed to rely upon his memory to select subconsciously, and also to pattern, the details of his descriptive pieces. In his posthumously published essay on "Cockermouth and Keswick," he has explained the process in the following words:—"I can not describe a thing that is before me at the moment, or that has been before me only a little while before; I must allow my recollections to get thoroughly strained free from all chaff till nothing be except the pure gold; allow my memory to choose out what is truly memorable by a process of natural selection; and I piously believe that in this way I ensure the Survival of the Fittest." Stevenson's entire product, as a life-long artist, might justly be described as an ecstasy of recollection; for he never put to literary uses any actual experience which had not already been transmuted to reality by the alchemy of Memory.

THE MIRACLE OF RECOLLECTION

Any pæan to the Muse of Memory must, therefore, be respected as a hymn of praise to the Mother of the Arts. The miracle of recollection is a sacred mystery; and, whenever we are summoned to recall our past experience, it is as if a voice had whispered to us, in authoritative tones, "If you have tears, prepare to shed them now." When Thomas Hood began the greatest of his lyrics with the line, "I remember, I remember . . ." he had little need of writing further; for already he was sure of a response from all the people in the world who once were young.

The main reason why George du Maurier must always be regarded as a great novelist is that he turned to writing only late in life, when his mind was richly stored with memories. This man was nearly sixty years of age before it occurred to him that it would be a beauti-

he was twenty-one. There is a line in "Peter Ibbetson" which says, "I have no talent for making new friends; but, oh! I have such a genius for remembering the old!", and this sentence gives us the measure of the man. He had a genius for remembering.

The life that he looked back upon was singularly lovely to remember. It was the life of a little boy, half English and half French, who had been brought up in Paris, the finest city of the modern world; it was the life of a youth who had lived as a student in the Quartier Latin; it was the life of an artist that, decade after decade, had been dedicated to the proposition that beauty is truth, truth beauty. His life was a beautiful adventure; and the recollection of his rich experience was more enchanting still. Du Maurier was a great man; and, when he came to write, he wrote greatly,—without initiation, without practise, without effort. He looked back upon his life and saw that it was good, and smiled, and told the world.

Many, many men among us have been boys in Paris; many have been students in the Quartier Latin; many of us, in our futile little ways, have endeavored to be artists, and failed and tried again and ultimately made some tiny something of which we were not utterly ashamed; and millions of us can remember some moment in our past that tells us that we have not lived entirely in vain. To all the members of this mystic confraternity, du Maurier must evermore appear as an acolyte before the altar of the Muse of Memory, the Mother of the Arts.

Du Maurier was one of nature's gentlemen. He died without appreciating the intimations of his immortality. He never knew that "Peter Ibbetson" and "Trilby" would be read with admiration a quarter of a century after they had been composed. He could not foresee the notable career of his son, Gerald, who now is recognized as one of the greatest actors on the English-speaking stage, nor the honorable life and noble death of his son, Guy, the author of "An Englishman's Home,"—Major Guy du Maurier, D. S. O., who carried his great name to martyrdom, somewhere in the fields of France. George du Maurier did not suspect the glory of his future; but he remembered all the glory of his past. He had lived, and he had not forgotten; and, in his two immortal novels, he paid back to the eternal gods with priceless eloquence his honestly acknowledged debt for the privilege of having lived. George du Maurier was endowed with a "genius for remembering"; and we, who were but children when his novels were composed, must evermore approach his unforgotten presence with rosemary in our hands.

"PETER IBBETSON"

The story of "Peter Ibbetson" is hardly what is called "dramatic," as stories are estimated in the theatre; and du Maurier could never have suspected that a play adapted from this novel would be drawing enthusiastic audiences in New York in 1917. He was a modest man, who builded better than he knew. Yet a dramatized version of "Peter Ibbetson" was fashioned a score of years ago by John N. Raphael. For some inexplicable reason, this play was not produced at the time when it was made. The piece was recently tried out in London, at a special matinée, shortly before the death

On the program, she is Genevieve Hamper, but on her cards, she is Mrs. Robert Mantell. She was leading woman all through Mr. Mantell's recent appearance in a repertory of Shakespearian plays ful adventure to say a thing or two in words before he died. He had long been famous as a graphic artist; he was, perhaps, the finest draughtsman of his generation; and the hundreds and hundreds of his drawings which had appeared in "Punch" had been admired all around the rolling world: but he had never, in his modesty, imagined himself to be a writer. But, in his later and declining years, du Maurier discovered the enchantment of looking backward; and this enchantment was so overwhelming that it allured him to lay aside the pencil and take up the pen. "I remember, I remember . . ." he began; and then a rush of recollection came welling to his pen as tears come welling to a poet's eyes. His first novel, "Peter Ibbetson," was written in remembrance of his childhood; his second novel, "Trilby," was written in remembrance of the brave days when

of Mr. Raphael. Miss Constance Collier was concerned in this performance; and it was Miss Collier who brought the manuscript to America. The present production of "Peter Ibbetson" in New York is due, in the main, to her initiation. The piece is excellently acted by a cast that includes—besides Miss Collier—such artists as Mr. John Barrymore, Mr. Lionel Barrymore, and Miss Laura Hope Crews; and it has been staged effectively by Mr. Clifford Brooke.

Mr. Raphael's version of "Peter Ibbetson" is scarcely a good play; but it is more ingratiating than many plays which conform more closely to the requirements of theoretic criticism. It exhibits adequately the essential moments of du Maurier's immortal story; and it arranges these moments in accordance with a pattern that is appreciably coherent. The third act is genuinely thrilling; and the dream-scenes in the second and fourth acts are sufficiently suggestive to elicit the contributive imagination of the sort of spectator who is able and willing to collaborate toward a realization of the subject-matter.

The play succeeds because of its tremendous theme. "Peter Ibbetson" assures us that the past is more impressive than the present, and that what a man imagines in his dreams is more momentous than what he sees about him in his waking hours. To state this theme in abstract terms,—we are told that actuality is non-significant until it has been transmuted to reality by the process of imagination. This is one of the few principles we know on earth, and almost the only principle we need to know. Little more—oh, very little more—is really worth the knowing.

It must have been from "Peter Ibbetson" that Mr. Rudyard Kipling borrowed the theme for one of his most beautiful short-stories, "The Brushwood Boy." In both narratives, the hero and the heroine are accustomed to meet each other habitually in their dreams. Their real life together is sub-conscious; for, in their waking moments, they are separated by an "unplumbed, salt, estranging sea" of space and time. This theme appeals with poignancy to every one who, discontented with the actual, has sought, in dreams and in imaginings, to build a better life, more nearly to his heart's desire. Our stature and our status in the world are measured not by what we actually are, but by what we are capable of encompassing by the exercise of our imagination. We are what we believe ourselves to be. And, touching the reality of dreams, let us listen for a little moment to Sir Thomas Browne, who says—"And surely it is not a melancholy conceit to think we are all asleep in this world, and that the conceits of this life are as mere dreams, to those of the next, as the phantasms of the night, to the conceit of the day. There is an equal delusion in both; and the one doth but seem to be the emblem or picture of the other. We are somewhat more than ourselves in our sleeps; and the slumber of the body seems to be but the waking of the soul. It is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason; and our waking conceptions do not match the fancies of our sleeps."

"THE VERY MINUTE"

One of the inexplicable mysteries of the American stage is the fact that Mr. David Belasco—our cleverest producing manager, our subtlest stage-director, the acknowledged wizard of our theatre—is so stupid, so astonishingly stupid, in his choice of plays. Why, in heaven's name, should he persist in his policy of producing nothing-at-all by nobody-at-all, while many masterpieces of the modern drama are still crying out for such a practised impresario as he to exploit them on our stage?

Mr. Arnold Daly is not only an unusually able actor but also an unusually able judge of plays. He has seldom appeared in any piece that was not worthy of serious attention; and more than a dozen of the plays that he has set before the public of New York are now accepted as acknowledged masterpieces of the modern drama. Earlier in the present season, he produced a piece of quite extraordinary interest—"The Master," by the famous Austrian author, Hermann Bahr. Yet, so soon as Mr. Daly signed a contract to appear under the management of Mr. Belasco, he was set forth in the most stupid piece that he had ever played in, and one of the most stupid pieces that had ever been exhibited at the Belasco Theatre.

"The Very Minute," by John Meehan, may be described as a boxing-bout, in three rounds, between the hero and the demon rum. Throughout the greater part of the evening, Mr. Daly is condemned to stand beside a table—left forward—tossing off innumerable ponies of brandy while all the other characters in turn are pleading with him to cast off the curse of drink. His dear old father, for some inexplicable reason, has never suspected that the hero is a dipsomaniac; but, at a quarter to eleven, the old man learns the bitter truth and drops dead at the shock of the discovery. Thereupon the hero sees a great light and climbs aboard the water-wagon.

There is no action in "The Very Minute." The author merely preaches for two hours and a half; and his preaching is extremely dull. It is very difficult to guess a reason why Mr. Belasco should have chosen to produce this negligible play. He may, possibly, have calculated that there might be money in supporting the prohibition movement at the present moment. But, in the long run, the surest way of making money in the theatre is to produce good plays.

"MRS. WARREN'S PROFESSION"

Two matinée performances of "Mrs. Warren's Profession" were given by Mary Shaw at the Criterion Theatre, on April 16 and 17, for the benefit of the building fund of the Gamut Club; and many of us were indebted to Miss Shaw for this opportunity to renew acquaintance with a play that was much talked about a dozen years ago.

"Mrs. Warren's Profession" is more dramatic than many of the later works of Mr. Bernard Shaw; but it is not, by any means, impeccably constructed. It comes too soon to its climax. The tremendous scene between Mrs. Warren and Vivie at the end of the second act quite overwhelms, and discounts in advance, the comparatively trivial and tricky situation at the conclusion of act three; and the final scene between mother and daughter comes as an anti-climax after their big scene in the second act.

Yet, despite the manifest defects of "Mrs. Warren's Profession" as a piece of play-making, this early work of Bernard Shaw's is still impressive because of the high seriousness of the author in discussing a social theme of undeniable importance.

"THE KNIFE"

There is no denying that Mr. Eugene Walter is endowed with an extraordinary talent for producing thrills in the theatre. His latest play, "The Knife," reminds us of the dear old days when the melodramas of Theodore Kremer and Owen Davis used to flourish on Third Avenue; but the piece is none the less effective because its patrons are asked to pay two dollars, instead of thirty cents, to see it.

In the dear old days of melodrama, the virtue of the heroine was always regarded as inviolable; but, in "The Knife," the heroine is drugged insensible and made the victim of a criminal assault. She is rescued from incarceration in a house of ill fame by her fiancé, who is a doctor, and his friend, who is a lawyer and consequently knows how to get around the law. Instead of killing outright the wicked persecutors of the heroine, the doctor binds and gags them and carries them off to his experimenting laboratory. He is on the point of discovering a cure for a disease that long has been regarded as a scourge of humankind. He inoculates the villains with the germs of this disease, and then tries upon them the antidotes with which he is experimenting. One of the villains dies; the other lives. The doctor thus discovers the true cure which shall annihilate the scourge. In order that the play may have a last act, sufficient facts are brought to light to warrant an assistant district attorney to initiate against the doctor a charge of murder; but this charge, of course, is quashed when the prosecutor is apprised of all the facts.

"The Knife" is a well-made play, and the second act is irresistibly exciting. Mr. Walter has done with extraordinary skill the thing that he set out to do; but those of us who remember "Paid in Full" and "The Easiest Way" may be pardoned for wondering why a dramatist of such undoubted talents should waste his energy

We all know that the couturiers have long practised black magic, but now they have surprised us by going in for what might be called "black sergery." As a result we have a black serge frock that dares but a few white muslin frills and keeps even its buttons on the black list

This is the kind of frock that thinks every woman has a right to her own particular figure and stays by her in whatever attitude she chooses to take. The clinging plaited skirt is of black satin and the likewise clinging blouse is black and white plaid silk jersey with revers of satin

ALL PARIS IS TALKING ABOUT THE WAY PREMET TREATS ITS FOULARDS, AND ALL PARIS WONDERS WHY IT KEEPS SERGE SO VERY, VERY DARK

Foulard and dark blue mousseline are divided against themselves in this frock; the foulard built itself what looks like a series of little walls of blue and white bricks, and then the mousseline just had to stay in the background

It's really very strange: the Parisienne wears a frock of blue and white foulard patterned in a lovely cashmere design, and then she calmly puts on an apron of white Georgette crêpe that covers up her frock almost from neck to hem

All this about the "difficult" or "awkward age" is really nonsense; you see, it all depends upon whether one has the sympathy and understanding of one's dress-maker. Take a morning frock of this sort, for example: of white crêpe de Chine, it is tasseled and embroidered with red silk; that isn't all though; there are double rows of pearl buttons that simply crowd themselves in their desire to trim the sleeves and skirt, and what is more, the frock is caught in slightly at the hem. Now who could be "difficult" in a frock like that?

(Middle) A party frock may be formal, but it should never, never make the faux pas of being overelaborate. A frock like this really tells something about one's personality. A demure overdress of organdy doesn't succeed in hiding all the gray organdy accordeon plaiting and ribbon trimming that goes on underneath it. The same overdress allows itself the gentle trimming of silver Valenciennes lace and delicately tinted satin flowers besides an apple green girdle, just for summer's sake. And then the hat,—that is braided pink organdy

Every traveled person knows that the greater part of traveling is to be "easy to look at" while you are doing it. That's why this long coat of camel's hair material in military blue was designed. The coat, collared and cuffed and belted with the same material, is equipped with big patch pockets and lined with cerise crêpe de Chine. A blue satin and straw hat that looks like a transplanted Red Cross head-dress does give one an "air," what with its white silk soutache cross and streaming blue veil. And it's really one way of showing a willingness to "do one's bit"; hats from Peggy Hoyt

THE TERM "FLAPPER" CARRIES NO STIGMA WHEN APPLIED TO A YOUNG PERSON ARRAYED AS ONE OF THESE

It's hard to believe that young girls were once stuffed into crinolines, insulated from the world by lace mitts, armed with a fan, and told to be good and let who would (or could) be clever. Consider this white Chinese silk striped with cherry red and wearing one of the last words in aprons, made of white crêpe de Chine. The white crêpe de Chine sailor collar shares pearl button trimming with two curved pockets. The dénouement arrives with the hat; and that's only half-trimmed. Yes, the black chenille balls go only half-way around the enchanted circle of black liséré

There was a time when plaids, however meek or however bold, were not allowed in the company of lace, but do witness this rose and white muslin plaid in the midst of quantities of cream lace, even in the presence of a severe rose satin vest

The first impulse of the designer was to keep this frock dark, but several facts leaked out: the first is that Mme. Bartet wore it, the second, that it has a chemise of black charmeuse, and the third, that the overdress is of black mousseline, embroidered with blue and silver

This frock is one to appeal to the old-rose-and-dove-gray side of a woman. These couturiers know that even our grandmothers were mad about ruffles, so they gave this white-embroidered white tulle frock three deep flounces, and then girdled it with velvet of the gentlest sort of blue. The neck, one notices, is high, and the sleeves are long, in spite of the rather low-necked and short-sleeved tendency many summer frocks are acquiring

Things are getting to a bad state when these strong plaids monopolize so much of a dress that a few little womanly white chiffon ruffles are positively overcrowded. One can't help admiring these plaids though; they are black and white silk muslin

WORTH EXPOUNDS THE INNOCENT THEME OF RUFFLES, AND THEN TELLS OF ANOTHER FROCK, A DARK ONE AND SUBTLE

The early summer is the time when you begin to murmur, "I'm going to have a white muslin frock, one made over rose satin; I can just feel it coming on." Then you choose one with a white-embroidered rose tussur girdle embroidered in wheels and crossing lines of white

SMART FASHIONS for LIMITED INCOMES

A MID-SUMMER fashion which will have special charm for the woman of limited means is the "apron." This attractive garment may be worn this season on almost any sort of costume, provided it follows the regulation lines of the one-piece dress. Paquin uses a bib apron of white dotted piqué on a simple one-piece frock of black charmeuse—very long and very straight in line, and the result is extremely chic. For the woman of limited means, the apron, rightly managed, may prove an invaluable assistant to summer smartness. One of the simple frocks of silk or charmeuse, now so much in favor, with a set of these charming aprons in piqué, in lace-trimmed chiffon, and in filet lace, will give three very different costumes, one for morning, one for afternoon, and even one for informal evening wear.

THERE'S MAGIC IN THE APRON

The white apron of fine Georgette crêpe, sketched with the frock at the lower left, slips on over the head and entirely changes the appearance of the afternoon frock of black and white striped foulard with which it is worn. This apron consists of a straight piece of Georgette crêpe, long enough to extend just below the waist-line in the back and to the knees in front. The V-shaped opening cut out for the neck may or may not be finished with a narrow rolling collar. A pointed edging embroidered in white satin rat-tail braid outlines the apron, and there is a belt of narrow black satin ribbon tied in front. This frock would be very pretty in dimity or handkerchief linen with an apron in white.

In the apron, the woman of limited means has a tool made to her own hand. With it she evolves countless frocks from one and the same frock

For Making Almost Half a Wardrobe of One Simple Costume, There Has Not Been in Many Seasons So Reliable an Aid as That Present Pet of Fashion, the Apron;—Newer Than Negligée or Smock Is the House Coat

Once we wore smocks; now, whether in boudoir or garden, we wear house coats,—sensible coats of linen or gingham for the garden and such dainty affairs as this coat of peach-colored faille for the boudoir. Knitting-bags are indispensable accompaniments of the boudoir house coat, for every patriot must knit

The apron lends a demure touch to the already quaint evening frock at the lower right on this page. This model was shown in dove gray chiffon over white satin at a smart shop. The tight bodice was of ivory satin fastened in front with small pearl buttons. The apron was of white chiffon, edged with point de Paris lace, and six pearl buttons trimmed either side. A narrow sash of dove gray grosgrain ribbon softened the line of the bodice and tied in a tiny bow.

HOUSE COATS INDOORS AND OUT

The newest favorite of the feminine heart is the charming house coat, and a

A tea-gown of sufficient formality to be suitable for wear when dining at home is one of the first requisites of a successful summer. Pale pink chiffon begins this model; the next layer is lavender chiffon, and the chemise is of fuchsia-colored chiffon, silver embroidered and belted with pink satin. The ribbons are green model unique in cut and color combination is shown in the sketch at the upper left on this page. The house coat, which opens in front, is of peach-colored faille, corded with the silk to outline a high waist-line and to finish the bottom. The collar, cuffs, and ruffle are of fine lace dyed gray. The skirt is of narrow loops of gray chiffon which begin at the waist and are looped over the hem and tacked under. Such house coats are, in a way, the successors of the smock and will be worn in the garden and about the house to a great extent this season. They are most comfortable and decorative garments. Those for the garden take on tailored lines and are of linen, gingham, or crash, but those for the house are delicate and lovely, both in material and colors.

To be really smart this summer, one must own a smart knitting-bag or sewing-bag, but it is much smarter to knit, for all feminine patriots who are not gardening this summer must knit. The bottom part of the bag which appears on the arm of the patriot in the house coat is of softest hemp straw in natural color and the upper part is of silk, which should match one's most becoming costume, of course. The flowers and foliage are of silk in harmonizing tones, applied to the bag along the line where straw and silk meet.

FOR INFORMAL SUMMER EVENINGS

For the charming quiet matron of the "Lavender and Old Lace" disposition, who prefers to spend her late afternoons and her informal home dinner hours in a tea-gown, the costume at the upper right on this page was especially designed. The top part of the gown is a straight chemise of deep fuchsia-colored chiffon. It is embroidered around the bottom and sleeves with bands of silver thread. The underdress is of lavender pink chiffon, over a second underdress of pale pink chiffon. The crush sash belt is of pale pink satin, and long strips of foliage—green satin ribbons trim the gown. These ribbons are finished at the ends with tassels of green silk mounted in cups of silver thread. No, it is not unusual to spend one's evenings in a tea-gown. Many very conservative women are doing it. Of course they are "home evenings." Even the young women are adopting this fashion of combined charm and comfort.

Aprons have succeeded not only in winning the hearts of those who do not toil, but even in invading the hours when the day's toil is over

NOT MERELY COSTUMES, BUT RATHER, PORT-ABLE BITS OF INTERIOR DECORATION, ARE THESE HOUSE AND BOUDOIR GARMENTS
 FROM LA CIGALE AND MARTHE GAUTHIER

About two-thirds of this La Cigale frock is a narrow firmament of yellow mousseline de soie, scattered over with round stars, each one of which is black, white, and blue. The other third is of white mousseline, ruffled for all the world like a frolicsome French chop (Below) When a negligée is as fetching as this one is from behind, we are willing to take the designer's word for it that it's all right in front, too. The yoke-sleeves of this Marthe Gauthier negligée are of gold lace; the drapery entailed is of rose crêpe de Chine

It is not quite a piece of sky, but it is light blue mousseline, the best known under-study for ethereal substance. This airy something (which mortals call a night-gown), La Cigale tied down with white ribbons; and bows of ribbon, set like sentinels, do duty as a waist-line

TWO OF THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE PRESENT SEASON, EMBROIDERY AND CONTRASTING MATERIALS, ARE HERE PRESENTED IN LINES ALMOST AS STRAIGHT AS RANKS OF SOLDIERS

(Right) There are three materials in this Buzenet frock; united, they stand to reason that it is successful. Blue crêpe de Chine, plaited, is the foundation for a tunic and bodice of blue mousseline; to the tunic is applied a rose crêpe de Chine and full of silver and gold wheels. Such a frock is a war relief in itself

(Below) When a French coat has a necktie, it has a big splashy one, perhaps of green and white plaid taffeta, like the one on this beige jersey coat from Martial et Armand. Such a necktie is a reminder of the attached mufflers in which we have been hiding our chilly winter noses

(Left) Two materials here agreed to differ; they are beige etamine and rose mousseline de soie. On the latter, Lelong put black silk bands and white embroidery; but what is more important is that it looks like a chemise blouse and isn't;—it's just part of a one-piece dress (Right) Jersey arrived socially so long ago that it has entrée everywhere and may bring companions. Brown and yellow embroidery accompanies this beige coat from Berthe Hermance. The lines suggest a wide silhouette, but faintly enough to admit of an alibi

S E E N i n t h e S H O P S

ONE requisite of the late spring and summer wardrobe is a frock, preferably of some fairly transparent material, which not only is cool to wear, but which is not easily rumpled and keeps its fresh and cool appearance even when worn to town on a warm summer day. Georgette crêpe is so satisfactory for this purpose that many of the smartest models continue to be made of it, although countless newer fabrics have been offered to replace it. Many women who dress very well indeed feel that it is unwise to purchase an expensive model for this purpose and prefer to be content with but a single season's use from such a frock or to lessen the wear on it by alternating it with a frock of foulard or voile.

FOR SUMMER DAYS IN TOWN

A very successful model is sketched at the bottom of this page, second from the left. The skirt of this cool town frock is finely tucked to yoke depth in front and back, and the groups of tucks are interspersed with hemstitching. At either side, groups of narrow, pressed, unstitched side plaits run the length of the skirt and give comfortable fulness at the feet without an appearance of width. The bodice is simple but not at all commonplace. The tucking and hemstitching which appear on the skirt are repeated on the bodice starting from a plain Georgette crêpe yoke, cut in one with the collar and faced with flesh chiffon to give the effect of a second collar in front and to fill in the neck opening in back. The sleeves are tucked and hemstitched and finished with a fairly deep cuff. The buttons are covered with Georgette crêpe and the soft wide sash, which ties in a loose wide bow at one side, is faced with chiffon. The dress is very pleasing in dove gray and flesh-color, but it is equally attractive and, of course, far more practical in navy blue. It is carefully made over a Crêpe de Chine is undeniably one of the most popular fabrics for afternoon frocks such as that sketched at the top of this page. This would be an excellent choice for a gown to alternate with the Georgette crêpe model just described. It has a bit more weight and is both smart and practical. The quality of the crêpe de Chine is good and the lining is of white China silk. Soft unstitched box plaits form a fairly wide panel on the skirt in front and back, with widely tucked shirred sections between. The bodice is softly plaited and has a pretty collar made of a straight soft fold of the crêpe de Chine with the ends hanging loose. The tucker is of white Georgette crêpe. The dress may be had in dark blue, old-blue, gray, beige, flesh, or white.

A hat suitable to accompany such a frock is a pretty model of navy blue liséré straw with a large, smartly posed, blue wing. A tiny band of beige grosgrain ribbon encircles the crown.

THE RUMOR OF "SHIRT-WAIST" DRESSES

One hears a great deal these days about the revival of the old-fashioned "shirt-waist dress," but when this rumor is sifted thoroughly, it becomes clear that its foundation is the mere fact that a simple frock with, let us say, plaits or tucks, and having its bodice separate from its skirt, is now called a "shirt-waist" dress. Some of these frocks are shown in such simple wash materials as dimity, gingham, and handkerchief linen, but the smartest of them are in heavy tub silk or in crêpe meteor, as is the model illustrated at the lower left on this page; this model is among the most satisfactory dresses of this character that have appeared so far this season. The kilted skirt has pressed box plaits about two inches wide and is right, is an exceptionally smart model of white Georgette crêpe, inset with an excellent quality of filet lace. The collar which finishes this blouse is a fashion always successful in soft waists. Tiny pockets trim the skirt section. This model may be had in either flesh-color or in white Georgette crêpe.

THE WASH SATIN SKIRT

The skirt with this blouse is a kilted model of white or black tub satin. White wash satin, which has been used extensively for waists this spring, has now made its appearance in separate skirts, and when well made of a good quality satin, such skirts are unusually pretty. Both the quality and the workmanship make the price of this skirt exceptional.

A simpler blouse of the same general character is shown in the middle of this page, at the left. It would be particularly pretty with a simple wash skirt of the plaited type. It is made of Japanese cotton crêpe, a fabric known to launder and wear exceptionally well. In pink, with rose stitching and large pearl buttons, it is exceptionally attractive and rather out of the ordinary. It may be had in pink, reseda, green, and tan.

Suited for wear with such a blouse is the smart sailor hat with a felt crown and a straw brim, both in natural color. The trimming consists of a band of gay Persian embroidery, which is ornamented with blue wooden beads.

A PARTY FROCK FOR YOUTH

A charming dress of soft net and lace for a young girl is illustrated at the lower right on page 84. The drop skirt is of net; the next skirt is of net lace trimmed and finished with a ruching; the tunic is of net with a lace flounce. The waist—a simple, round, baby waist,—has a net alike in front and back, where a panel effect is gained by white pearl buttons at either side. The very smart bodice has inverted plaits and a plain front section linking together with pearl buttons at the top. This dress is particularly smart in white crêpe meteor, but it may also be had in black or navy blue.

A HAT FOR SIMPLE FROCKS

The white chip straw hat which is sketched with this frock is of a particularly pretty shape. The brim is faced with a flesh color wing trimming which entirely encircles it, ending in an ornament, also of wings, at the right side. The hat is particularly pretty in this combination, but may also be had in all dark blue.

The blouse which extends below the belt has been steadily gaining in popularity since it originally appeared over a year ago. The late spring and summer season will undoubtedly do much to strengthen this fashion, as waists of this character are really prettiest when worn over light colored skirts. Illustrated at the bottom of page 84, second from the frill around the neck, two frills on the sleeves, and another around the waist, where it is held in place by a blue picot-edged ribbon, ending in a little bouquet of forget-me-nots at one side. The quality in both the net and the lace is of the very best to be had anywhere.

BATHING-SUITS ON SMART LINES

Bathing-suits seem to be largely of two kinds this season,—those made on just as straight lines as the chemise dress, and those on surplice lines, which hold their place by virtue of being so very becoming. A suit on straight lines is illustrated at the lower left on this page; it is made of an excellent quality of black taffeta with pipings in color. The unusual cut gives the necessary fulness to the skirt portion, while the upper part is quite like a chemise dress in effect. The pretty rubber cap may be had in practically all colors.

An excellent example of the surplice bathing-suit is the black satin suit at the bottom of this page, in the middle. This suit has a fairly full shirred skirt and a

Since its advent, some ten years ago, the couch hammock has had no lapses from public favor, and each season has added to its pleasing qualities. (Left) Comfort has always been a characteristic of wicker furniture, but its distinction is a somewhat recent acquisition and is a matter not only of design but of well-selected color. This set, which may be had painted and upholstered to order, is here painted a pleasantly bright red and upholstered in cretonne broadly striped in white and black and patterned with flowers in blue, green, yellow, and red. The set consists of the following pieces. Table, $30.50. Arm-chair, $31; with cushion, $35.75. Extension, for arm-chair, $13.50; with cushion, $23.25. Rocker, $31.50; with cushion, $36.25. Settee, $49; with cushion, $61

PORCH AND GARDEN STUDY THE COLOR SCALE

EVERY year new and interesting designs in willow furniture are put forward by every manufacturer, and in recent seasons it is specially interesting to note the great variety of colorings as well as designs.

Many attractive color combinations are made, and more and more care is now being devoted to making the furniture harmonize with the cretonne cushions or draperies. In choosing the colors, the cretonne is now often secured first, and the wicker furniture is decorated according to the color and design of the cretonne. The set at the bottom of this page is a very good illustration of this. The cretonne used is an imported piece and has a dull green background with dark blue stripes on which are rose-colored flowers. The furniture is decorated in these colors combined with black and forming stripes. The outer frame is black, while the colors form stripes at the back of the chairs. The top of the table is covered with the cretonne. On request, the shop which sells this set will send samples of cretonne, and the furniture may be had decorated to match the material selected. The set consists of seven pieces; those not shown in the picture are an armless rocker, an arm-chair and an arm-rocker. Two pillows, one round and the other oblong, come with this set, sold only complete.

FIRST CATCH YOUR CRETONNE

A different style of wicker furniture is shown at the top of this page. This is equally smart for sun-porch or piazza. The black which has been so popular is used quite extensively in this set. The black backs of chairs and settee are striped vertically with a purple band, and the table also combines the black and purple on the top and on the sides between the legs, which are painted black. To brighten the furniture, the upholstery is in a bright cretonne with an all-over floral design, which has a white back-

Every season adds to our store of wicker furniture, and now the makers have seized upon the laudable plan of painting the wicker to match the new cretonnes. You now first catch your cretonne, then match the furniture to it. This set of four pieces for a veranda or sun porch, includes a settee which is not shown. Settee, $35; with cushions, $44.25. Armchair, $23.50; with cushions, $28.25. Rocker, $24; with cushions, $28.75. Table, $15. Lantern of fish-glue paper decorated, $5

Each Season Brings Its New Note in Wicker Furniture; This Season It Is the Distinction Which Comes from Harmony of Furniture and Cretonne

ground with many colored flowers and leaves. The furniture may be had with or without the cushions. This set also comes in a dull-finished brown or may be ordered decorated in any desired color. The set consists of four pieces, and includes a settee which is not illustrated.

In the same illustration is shown a new lantern for porch or lawn. It is made of fish glue paper, which is transparent and is similar to Japanese rice paper; it is decorated in conventional designs in bright blue, yellow, and red.

For a large sun parlor, there is a set of enameled wicker which may be had in any color and is illustrated at the bottom of the opposite page. As illustrated, the set was enameled very effectively in bright red. The design of the furniture is new, and the set consists of table, rocker, arm-chair, with or without extension, and settee. The cretonne used on the cushions has a broad black and white striped background and a conventional floral design of blue, green, yellow, and red; the cushions are covered on both sides. The large fan-shaped backs of chairs and settee have a star design woven in the wicker.

Shown at the upper left on the opposite page is a couch hammock which may be had covered with a cretonne patterned with large birds in soft tones of green on a gray background. The sides of the hammock are of soft gray canvas; the canopy, which is braided, is a darker gray canvas, edged with a cotton fringe in gray, and the steel framework is painted gray to harmonize with the hammock; two pillows covered with the cretonne come with this hammock, which may also be had in a cretonne in yellow with gray decorations or in blue with design in rose. The hammock is thirty inches wide and six feet long.

COMFORT FOR THE GARDEN HOURS

For out-of-doors in the summer, there is nothing more attractive and comfortable for the lawn than a couch hammock. The one shown at the upper right on the opposite page is covered with wide green and white striped canvas. On either side of the green is a narrow blue stripe. The back of the hammock is padded, and the springs may be raised at one end. The steel frame is enameled white, and the chains which hold the hammock have steel springs. Two pillows come with this couch, which is thirty inches wide and six feet long.

Shown in the middle of the opposite page is an attractive lawn parasol with an enameled steel table and four chairs. The parasol and the covers for table and chairs are of gray duck bound with white cotton tape, and at the end of each rib of the parasol is a large white cord tassel. The table is forty-five inches in diameter and the umbrella thrust through it has a spread of nine feet.

(Below) This furniture of distinctive design may reflect not one but all the colors of the cretonne which upholsters it, for it is painted in stripes of as many colors as one will and rimmed with black. The cretonne, which may be of any desired pattern, covers all the cushions and the top of the round table. This set, which is not sold in separate pieces, includes the four pieces shown here, including the two extra pillows, and also an armless rocker, an arm-chair, and an arm-rocker; $104

Those who are interested in adding to the beauty of the coast-line are wearing beach bonnets of green, rose, and gray toile de Jouy, tied with green ribbons

IN THE NAME OF NEPTUNE

THE costume worn by those who disport themselves upon sandy beaches differs greatly from that worn by those who go down to the sea in ships, and that worn by those who delight in the daily "dip" differs again from that worn by the "beach butterfly," who frocks herself with the rainbow, so to speak, for the sole benefit of passers-by. Not so much for the bather as for the butterfly, therefore, are designed the new and striking costumes of many colors, the broad beach hats and fair beach parasols, the beach cloaks, beach bags, and beach blankets which will decorate our summer beaches.

WHAT THE BUTTERFLY LIGHTS ON

Is the gentle reader acquainted with the beach blanket? The beach blanket, mesdames, is neither a steamer rug nor a Navajo blanket nor yet a futurist carpet. It is square, oblong, or round in shape, and something more than passing gay in color. It is spread upon the beach like a great brilliant flower, and on it, carefully protected from damp sand, rests the beach butterfly, looking out to sea—or is it to be seen? In full beach panoply, the modern maid is more than dangerously seductive, and the beach in her immediate vicinity is always strewn with wreckage.

BEACH SHELTER

Gay is the parasol which shelters the beach butterfly, gay and sometimes extremely odd in shape, although this season there has been a reaction in favor of the classic parasol, not too flat and not too convex in form. One of these new parasols is apparently covered with a section of a quaint old patchwork quilt; the pattern is rendered in gay colors.

There is a square parasol of awning silk in broad stripes of blue, red, and yellow, and a round, many-ribbed Japanese parasol of orange silk striped with green, black, and white. One of plain blue silk is spotted with yellow, and there are violent but effective checks of all sorts. Besides these, there are parasols of plain silk embroidered with colored wool. The stick of the beach parasol is not so short as formerly and is a little thicker than it was wont to be.

The beach bag may be of any size and shape. Last season, the top of the beach bag was closed with draw-strings but this season a fastening of coroso in any preferred color is often employed instead. As to color, the "sky-blue-pink" of our childhood is pale in comparison to the new beach bag. The one of brilliant green silk sketched on this page has two stiff sides of black, rose, and green embroidery.

THE HABITS OF THE BEACH CLOAK

The beach cloak is a shapeless, half-hearted sort of garment, with a tassel, a slit or two for the arms or a cunning seam, to distinguish it from its brother, the blanket. One "checker-board" of orange and white—the checks are three inches square—is finished with great tassels of orange wool, and lined with green silk. It is sketched at the bottom of this page. Coarse white woolen cheviot embroidered in some fantastic design and unlined is much liked for the beach cloak, which is worn alike by those who take bathing seriously, and by those little groups of less serious bathers who stay safely on the shore.

Some of the most picturesque spots in France are found on its beaches. These are blue, sprinkled over the surface of a white silk suit which is chaperoned by a reversible, red-lined, blue cloak

What makes her charming?

INTERWOVEN with her beauty, grace and personality are many dainty refinements which complete the magic fabric of woman's charm. One of these is the subtle scent of sweet, flowery perfume or powder.

Lundborg's Arborea is a fascinating exotic fragrance, hinting of roses, spicy carnations, languorous heliotropes and sweet violets. This delightful scent may be had in extract, toilet water, soap, sachet, face powder and talc.

Lundborg's Arborea Talc

Lundborg
Perfumer New York

There is no escaping these purveyors to the feminine toilet. When they are not tempting us with new and engaging preparations, they are luring ducats from our purse with such fittings as a powder-box and a lip-stick case, all in gilt and enamel and enclosed in a calf-skin box.

ON HER DRESSING-TABLE

IT is such a nuisance at this time of the year to have to give thought to the complexion. When all sorts of tempting little jaunts in the open air are in prospect, one has the inclination to send caution to the winds; but, alas, it is the winds which present the greatest danger and it is not safe to relax one's vigilance and care for even a minute, for the delicate skin is more quickly spoiled than repaired.

Specialists preach the practise of non-washing when traveling about in summer. Of course, if one is staying for any length of time in one place and the water is soft—or, better, if there is a rain-water tank—then normal washing of the face with water may be resumed. When in doubt, however, the wise course for the summer traveler is to use some perfectly reliable cleansing cream.

A PENETRATING CREAM

One of the best-known laboratories in town, after years of careful research, has compounded a cream that is remarkable for its penetration and for the quickness with which it is absorbed; it is extremely light, soft, and creamy, very refreshing, soothing, and cooling, and is especially compounded for use after exposure to wind and dust; it quickly removes dust, dirt, and grime, leaving the skin soft and refreshed. This delightful aid to traveling comfort may be bought for 85 cents and $1.50 a jar.

If it is one's custom to massage or pat a cream into the skin to promote circulation, one may purchase a very satisfactory cream that is made to be used in conjunction with the above cleansing cream. It is a preparation that gives true skin nutrition and has decided toning qualities, tending to remove incipient lines; this cream is very cleansing and imparts a velvety softness to the skin. It is sold at $1, $1.75 and $3 a jar.

Belonging to the same series is a protective cream and bleach, which is said to remove freckles, tan, sunburn, liver spots, and similar blemishes; this is particularly good for removing the dark stain on the neck sometimes caused by friction from a high collar. It should be used on the face before exposure to dust, wind, or sun. This is sold for 75 cents a jar.

ACCOMPANYING POWDER

With any of these creams, one should use the powder that is designed to combine with them, as it is pure, fine, and soothing. This powder is prepared in four colors,—white, flesh, cream, and mauve, and may be bought for 50 cents a box. The same powder is made up in liquid form, and this is an advantage for evening use on the neck and arms. This powder is made in three tints,—white, flesh and cream, and costs 50 cents a bottle.

There is a dainty colored pomade rouge that is becoming very popular for tinting the skin and imparting a delicate natural color that can be intensified or diminished at will; this is very lasting, not easily washed off, and difficult to detect. This pomade is made of very pure materials and may be bought in small jars for 50 cents.

In warm weather, one always welcomes the refreshing effect of eau de cologne, and when a little novelty is given to this standard perfume by combining in it the orange flower with the sweet marshmallow, the effect is very pleasant. This cologne may be bought at $1.40 for an

SILVERTOWNS MAKE ALL CARS HIGH GRADE

All the comforts of a touring-car are combined in the new four-passenger Overland runabout, which provides even a compartment for luggage, yet remains a smart roadster

MOTOR NOTES

THE old type of runabout with its flexible seating capacity has been given a variety of names, each of which is descriptive of the arrangement of the passenger accommodations. "Three- and four-passenger roadsters" are self-explanatory, while "clover leaf," "chummy four," "close couple," and the like, all indicate the shape of the seat or the capacity. One of the newest runabouts of this type is known as the "country club" model, although from this title it is not to be assumed that the car is unfitted for touring or for city use. It is, however, of unique appearance and is just the type of car suited for the conveyance of one, two, three, or four passengers to the club or beach. The entrance to the rear compartment is gained by dividing the front seats in the manner usually found on the "clover leaf" type. This rear compartment has ample accommodations for two passengers, so that the car from the exterior somewhat resembles a small, four-passenger, touring body. There is a slight overhang at the rear, however, which affords a compartment suitable for stowing golf clubs, bags, or other luggage; this is reached from the rear seat without the necessity of dismounting from the car. This body is mounted on one of the popular types of four-cylinder chassis and sells for $795.

THE INTER-HOUSE 'PHONE EN ROUTE

Intercommunicating telephones have come to be a part of many country estates and city residences. Such a system is almost a necessity in the modern efficiently conducted office, but to find this installation in a motor car might, at first glance, seem to be carrying things too far. It should be realized, however, that the noise caused by the rush of air and the clatter of other traffic makes communication with the chauffeur, especially if he sits forward of a glass windshield, or in another division of an enclosed body, almost impossible, unless one risks life and limb by leaning over the door to make the voice carry around the corner. Therefore, these interconversing systems find a large field of usefulness in both open and closed cars. In some instances these telephones are known as motor dictagraphs and are operated by current supplied from the storage battery of the car. In a closed car, the usual location for the receiving end is on a panel or upright of the frame of the car, on a level with the driver's head. The transmitting end may be unobtrusively embedded in the upholstery or side paneling of the enclosed rear, or in some other strategic position where it will collect and convey all of the conversation destined for the driver's ear. In the case of the open car, however, no supports are convenient for the location of the receiver; however, so positive and plain are the tones conveyed that the instrument may be placed at some distance from the driver's head. A satisfactory location in at least one model is at the base of the steering-post under the cowl dash and close to the coupled arrangement of the instruments and speedometer. In this position the receiver is out of the way, is protected from the dust, and throws the desired sound toward the rear, where the driver can catch the sounds as easily as he could converse with his companion on the front seat.

PERFECTION TO THE LAST DETAIL

We have always understood that the exceedingly high-priced cars were the products of foreign workshops, where hand manufacturing methods are still in vogue. But, strange as it may seem, shortly before the entrance of this country into the war, there was produced on the Pacific Coast what is by far the most expensive car manufactured in commercial quantities. The power-plant alone in this car is worth the price of three or four ordinary touring-cars, for it contains the most advanced type of aviation engine, in which light weight, efficiency, power, and reliability are the goal of the designer. The instrument board of this car is of plate glass, while the door handles, as well as the buttons on the spark and throttle levers, the hood clamps and adjusting handles on the wind-shield are made of ivory. In exterior construction, also, this car differs from any other high-class vehicle. This difference is to be noted particularly in the sloping radiator, which is tilted at an angle about equal to that found on the wind-shield of the modern car. This gives a streamline, rakish, and speedy appearance to the car, which is not belied by the actual results obtained, for this is said to be one of the fastest stock touring-cars ever turned out. No detail of convenience for owner and passengers has been overlooked. For example, the tool-box, which is located at the rear, is provided with an electric bulb inside, which lights as soon as the box is opened. Similar lights are also placed inside the motor-bonnet, over the engine, so that the driver can obtain an instant view of the vital portions of his power-plant at a moment's notice. This chassis was intended to sell for $9,000, but the war has delayed its production.

detection. That is, they are trained to detect a car of a certain year, model, and make merely by the general lines of the body, the shape of the hub-caps, the location of the tire-carrier, or the arrangement of the head and tail lights. If the traffic officer need concentrate his efforts only on the modern car, he would find that by headlamp design and arrangement, alone, he could determine almost every brand on the market. There seems to be no limit to the unique designs produced by the various manufacturers. The customary location of the lamp, on a bracket fastened to the inside of the mud-guard, has, in some instances, given way to a short stubby bracket bolted directly to the projection of the frame where it joins the spring. Such a location gives a much lower headlamp mounting, with the result that the rays are directed on the road, where the light is desired, rather than in the treetops.

Another type of headlight has been designed to follow in general outline the popular shape of the V-type radiator now used on several of the modern cars. These lights are mounted close to the radiator and are provided with V-shape lenses carried at about the same angle as the two surfaces of the radiator. Because the glass is plain, the rays are not deflected by the vertical line forming the center of the V, and the appearance is entirely in keeping with the streamline effect of the remainder of the car.

INGENUITY IN GARAGE DOORS

We have pointed out before in this department the difficulty attendant upon the proper mounting of a door in the small private garage. A swinging door is unwieldy and awkward to handle, especially if snow or slush has accumulated under it, and it is exceedingly annoying in a high wind. The sliding door is ideal in certain respects, but requires a garage of a greater width than that necessitated for the storage of one car. An ingenious type of sliding door has been designed, however, which may be used on a garage scarcely wider than the width of the door itself. This sliding door is in three sections, each of which is hinged to its neighbor. The track on which the door is mounted is curved and is run along the adjoining side of the garage. As the door is opened, the sections follow the curve in the track, so that the entire door bends like a Japanese screen. When the car is not to be taken out, one section of the door alone may be opened to allow people to enter or leave the garage.

GLASS THAT NEVER SPLINTERS

Glass has come to play an important part in our motoring comforts. It has always occupied a necessary place in the headlights, but it has been only during the past five or six years that windshields have become a part of the regular equipment of every car. Now we have added winter bodies, sedans, and all manner of enclosed cars, which are practically entirely surrounded by glass. Although such glass is well made and designed to withstand the shocks of road travel, an overhanging branch, a stray missile, or a sharp collision will cause it to shatter, and may bring serious injury to the occupant. A new type of glass has been devised for use in pleasure cars, and so far as utility is concerned, this glass serves the purpose of the best French plate glass. This is known as super-glass and possesses the qualities of flexibility and resiliency to such an extent that a stone thrown at it will bounce back, cracking the glass but throwing no splinters. It is therefore similar in the results obtained to the wire-mesh glass used on all fire-proof doors.

eight-ounce bottle. The delightful preparations for warm weather use are legion; in fact, there is almost an embarrassment of riches, but then, there are many tastes to suit.

Hardly less varied than the preparations for the toilet are the novel articles designed for holding such preparations. A delightful new vanity case is shown at the top of page 96. The case is of glazed calfskin with a satin lining. Inside the case are a powder-box and a lip-stick holder. The case is three inches square and one and one-quarter inches deep, and, complete with the powder-box and lip-stick holder, it costs $5.50.

The attractive set of bottles at the bottom of page 96 has a glazed calfskin stand with a gold-tooled border. Fitted in this stand are three frosted glass bottles to hold hair tonic, glycerine, and peroxide. The base measures nine and one-quarter inches by three and one-half inches, and the case is six and one-half inches high. This set, complete, with bottles, costs $12.

FOR THE HOSTESS

THE local color of our menus has changed of late from Roumanian and Serbian, from French and Belgian, to Russian, and the Russian Revolution has been celebrated by introducing a characteristic Russian note into the entertaining. Doubtless the Pan-American or Brazilian note will come next. This seems, therefore, a fitting time to introduce the pleasant Russian custom of serving zakouski as a preliminary or as an important part—even as almost all—of the early summer luncheon.

In Russia, it is customary to serve these delicious tidbits, which constitute what, in other lands, is known as the hors d'œuvre, from a sideboard in a room adjoining the dining-room. The sideboard, dressed with all sorts of special pastries, smoked fish, caviar, and other delicacies, has its pile of plates and forks, and before entering the dining-room, each person serves himself and partakes of this appetizer standing, taking with it some of the strong Russian liquors. The general name of zakouski is, like hors d'œuvre, comprehensive and includes all the varied dishes on this festive board. In Germany and in Scandinavia the same custom is observed, and it has been widely copied by hotels and restaurants everywhere; often very ordinary cold hors d'œuvres bearing no relation to the Russian appetizers are given the fantastic Russian title, without rhyme or reason.

TO LUNCHEON, THE HORS D'ŒUVRE

One great authority on the cuisine, no less a person than Escoffier himself, maintains that hors d'œuvres containing any sort of fish salad, marinated fish and vegetables, and similar things should be strictly proscribed at dinner. Caviar may be tolerated, but never the others. If there be anything other than clams or oysters, let it be a hot canapé or one of those strictly American institutions,—the chilled melon or the supreme of grapefruit, accompanied by very dry Rhine wine or white Bordeaux. It is not only that cold hors d'œuvres are unnecessary at a dinner; they are prejudicial to the flavor of the soup that follows.

At luncheon, however, the hors d'œuvres are indispensable, and varied combinations of them, thrown into relief by clever arrangement, lend a tempting aspect to the buffet. Even as the soup foretells the dominant note of a dinner, so should the hors d'œuvres reveal that of a luncheon. No department of culinary art has shown such progress during the past few years as that of the making of delectable hors d'œuvres. At the Hotel de Paris at Monte Carlo, a great round table, laid in continental fashion in the magnificent dining-room, used frequently to show from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty hors d'œuvres, each different from its neighbor and all bewilderingly alluring. Now, when every one is talking economy, this savory adjunct to the meal comes into its own, for many odds and ends of vegetables and meats may be converted into really delectable tidbits, and many hostesses are experimenting to the joy of their households and friends.

There is a growing tendency in these days, to make entire summer luncheons from hors d'œuvres served in informal fashion upon the screened porch, with cocktails and Rhine wine cup and other warm weather beverages. Sandwiches and perhaps tiny hot biscuits or rolls accompany these cold dishes, and the result is an eminently sensible and tempting meal. Men who used to drop in at the Brasserie Universelle or the Café de la Paix in Paris for just such a déjeuner as this, are delighted at finding the custom transferred to this side of the Atlantic.

BUTTERING THE HORS D'ŒUVRE

Some of the more simple butters and creams used in preparing hors d'œuvres are not half as formidable as one imagines. Caviar butter, for example, consists merely of three ounces of caviar pressed through a fine sieve, together with four ounces of butter, and stirred smooth; the mixture is then set aside in an enamel bowl in the ice-box until wanted. Shrimp butter may be made with the prepared shrimp paste or with four ounces of cooked fresh shrimps, rubbed through a fine sieve with the same weight in butter. When well softened, this paste should be rubbed again through fine muslin. Curry butter consists of four ounces of butter, worked soft with a silver spoon in a bowl and mixed with sufficient curry powder to give it a decided flavor. Lobster butter is made from four ounces of lobster trimmings and coral, rubbed through a sieve with an equal amount of butter. For horseradish butter, four ounces of butter are blended with two ounces of grated horseradish and rubbed through a fine sieve. Smoked salmon, crayfish, and red herring treated in similar fashion give butters of delicious flavor for canapés, sandwiches, or hors d'œuvres.

Paprika butter is made with ordinary butter mixed with paprika, in the proportion of a teaspoonful of paprika to four ounces of butter; a little French trick not commonly known, is the adding a few drops of white wine or consommé, which accentuates the color of the paprika. Pimiento butter is made from canned sweet pimientos rubbed through a sieve with some sweet butter.

THE CREAM OF THE MATTER

Creams rival butters in the preparation of hors d'œuvres. Caviar cream is made from four ounces of caviar, two ounces of butter, and two ounces of cream. When this has been pressed through a sieve, three tablespoonfuls of salted whipped cream should be added. Smoked salmon cream, tunny fish cream, chicken cream, game and lobster cream are done in the same way.

Mustard sauce with cream is delicious with shredded cabbage or celery, as a garnish to cold meat. Three tablespoonfuls of made English mustard are put in a bowl with a little salt, pepper, and a few drops of lemon-juice. The whole is mixed, and, a little at a time, fresh sweet cream is added until the mixture is of the desired consistency. Whipped cream may also be used.

Some easily made hors d'œuvres for a luncheon al fresco may be new to hostesses who have not yet adopted this custom. Anchovy paupiettes are made from thick slices cut from large cucumbers; the centers are hollowed out to about the diameter of a silver dollar, rings of fillets of anchovies in oil are arranged around the slices, which should first have been marinated in French dressing, and the centers are filled with cream of tunny fish or cream of salmon. Anchovy medallions have as the base a round slice of cold boiled potato, marinated in French dressing. Similar shapes are cut from cold pickled beets, and around the edges are arranged fillets of anchovies; the center is filled with caviar and chopped hard-boiled eggs mixed with caviar butter.

SALT MEATS AND FRESH FRUITS

Smoked beef cut in squares and Virginia ham cut in the same fashion and very thin may be rolled into little cornucopias and filled with chutney and with piccalilli. Celeri à la bonne femme is made from equal portions of celery and russet apples cut julienne fashion and tossed together in the mustard cream sauce described above. York cones are made from cold boiled York ham sliced thin and rolled into cones and filled with any of the butters or creams given among these recipes. Tongue cones are made in the same fashion.

When fresh figs are obtainable, they may be served on a bed of green leaves and surrounded with shaved ice. Cherries may be served in the same fashion. A delightful mode of serving melon or cantaloup prevails in the Latin countries and may well be emulated here. At the stem end of the melon (Montreal, casaba, Rocky Ford melons, or even ripe cantaloup is suitable), is made a round incision about three inches in diameter. The plug thus cut is withdrawn, and the seeds are all removed with a silver spoon. Then one half pint of the finest old port, Marsala or sherry is poured into the melon, the plug replaced, and the melon is set in the ice-box for two or three hours, and well surrounded with cracked ice. It should be taken to the table whole; when serving, the piece containing the stalk is withdrawn, and the fruit is cut in shell-like slices and served on ice cold plates with a little of the wine accompanying each portion.

VARIATIONS IN TOMATOES AND EGGS

Tomatoes, peeled and having their centers removed, are frequently stuffed with a purée of fish or a macédoine of vegetables, combined with mayonnaise and a little jelly—calf's foot or aspic—and set in the ice-box for several hours that their contents may harden. Just before serving, they are removed, cut in quarters with a sharp knife, and served on beds of crisp lettuce leaves, with four quarters to each portion.

All sorts of combinations may be evolved from cold boiled eggs, and stuffed eggs and cold eggs cut up in mayonnaise are among the most favored hors d'œuvres. Stuffed artichoke bottoms, cold boiled beets stuffed with potato salad, spring onions, radishes, Spanish onions, and new potatoes done into salads, cold smoked meats and sardines, artichokes in oil, and all varieties of olives are pressed into service to give variety to the dishes, and the hostess may take pride in having as large a variety as she wishes. Tiny beaten biscuits or hot rolls, buttered and served piping hot in a napkin, and sandwiches of all sorts are acceptable accompaniments to all hors d'œuvres.

A new frozen salad, salad Helène, is a pleasant surprise on a hot day. To make it, one pint of strained tomato juice is seasoned highly with salt, pepper, and paprika, and to it is added one large Spanish onion, two cucumbers, and two green peppers, all chopped fine. It is put in a freezer and frozen like water ice, until firm. Tomato shells of uniform size are filled with this mixture and set upon lettuce leaves on individual glass salad plates. Mayonnaise is piped over the top in roses and very thin whole wheat bread and butter sandwiches are served with it.

Hearts of lettuce chilled and served with French dressing in which chutney has been incorporated make a favorite hors d'œuvre, especially when little salt biscuits spread with Gorgonzola cheese are served at the same time.

NEW IDEAS FOR OLD DISHES

When one tires of asparagus vinaigrette or Hollandaise, this Italian way of serving it may be tried at dinner on some cool night in June. Artichoke bottoms are stewed in butter and cut in dice, and twice the quantity of asparagus tips, also cooked in butter, are added. They are mixed with a little hot sweet cream, then arranged in a baking-dish in a pyramid, masked with sauce Mornay, and baked until the Mornay sauce with its cheese strewn over the top, is brown. Grated Swiss cheese should be used. Asparagus served in Flemish style has with each portion half a hard boiled egg, hot, and a little melted butter. The yolk of the egg is to be crushed with the butter and put upon the asparagus tips by the diner himself.

A delicious new sweet is an old one with a new touch. In glass serving dishes, balls of vanilla ice cream are placed, and these are slightly flattened by pressing down upon each one a thick slice of preserved Hawaiian pineapple. Hot chocolate sauce is poured over to mask this well, and one has a sweet that finds instant favor. It shall be called boule espagnol.

A plaid cheviot coat is as nothing without a matching hat. This one is blue and green, banded with green leather.

VOGUE POINTS

THE parasol, while not materially altering its shape this season, does not hesitate to change its color, or rather,—judging from the one sketched at the lower left—its spots. Of dull green silk is this sunshade, with large superimposed spots of blue, white, red, and black. A wreath of roses surrounds the white tulle parasol of similar shape, which is sketched at the lower right, and with the white tulle, the pink roses and pink-lacquered stick are most effective.

SPORTS hats of simple shape are made of plaid cheviot matching the coat in tissue and color. One is sketched at the top of this page. In beige and red, or blue and yellow, they are especially smart. Sports hats are also made of blue, yellow, or beige velours de laine, as well as of white serge and tricot in white and colors.

A FAVORITE girdle is the narrow one sketched in the middle of the page. The lower girdle passes under the straight-falling back of the frock, while the other encircles the figure and is knotted carelessly in front. Incidentally, the single flower embroidered at the top of the black satin chemise is done in blue and gray.

All Paris is bound up in narrow girdles that behave this way.

She was a brunette and she was French,—and so she banded her head with blue and silver tulle and pearls.

It begins with a blue turban, and it comes to a good end in a hooded collar of red velours de laine, heavily tasseled.

To a green silk parasol are applied great spots of black, white, red, and blue,—and yet, after all this evidence, they say Paris is quiet.

Parasols of white tulle and pink roses were just made for those ultra-feminine women who always get the best of everything.

The Sinews of Mileage

Every muscle of a man is made up of small strings—sinews, —not of one solid mass.

The more sinewy or stringy the muscle, the stronger it is.

It is a law of engineering that many small strings or strands made into a cable give the greatest possible strength and flexibility.

And nature exemplifies that law in the muscles of every living being.

That very law governs the construction of the 'Royal Cord' Tire.

This tire is made up of many layers of many small, but very tough, cords;—the construction which is exactly in harmony with the laws of nature as exemplified in the muscles of a man,—and equally in accord with the best engineering practices in other lines of construction where great strength is required.

* * *

There is no question that this type of cord tire construction gives the absolute maximum of strength, —gives, like a man with strong, sinewy muscles, the most power and endurance.

And behind this long-mileage quality of the 'Royal Cord' Tire, this self-same construction gives flexibility and elasticity superior to any other form of tire construction.

* * *

The 'Royal Cord' Tire—which is one of the five types of United States Tires—has clearly proved that it is the monarch of all cord tires.

beads. The collar is of blue crêpe de Chine, and the black satin girdle is lined with blue.

PAJAMAS of silk or cotton in bizarre plaids are smartly finished with rows of buttons and button-holes,—which are destined to remain unfastened. Mules are also made of the plaid stuff and finished with pompons of wool or silk, like those sketched in the middle at the bottom of this page. Futurist mules of satin are adorned with applied spots of violent color, and a little pair of soft silver blue satin mules are lined with old-gold satin, which is folded back and finished with small gold tassels. One of these appears next to the bottom, at the left.

AT the top of this page is an automobile hood which continues into a cape with scarf-like ends which may be tied in front or thrown carelessly about the neck. The tassels are red, and the hood, which was designed for a young girl, is buckled with red coroso in the back.

hood is attached to a loose coat of the same tissue, and the small tasseled turban is of corbeau blue satin.

VERY pretty is a simple head-dress of pearls and brilliant blue and silver tulle, especially when worn over dark hair; a glimpse of it may be had at the left in the middle of page 108. Small blue flowers encircle another dark head, and a skeleton plume of silver rises from the forehead.

AN odd fur collar for summer is in the form of a circular necklet, lying loose about the shoulders and weighted with a tassel of silver. It may be drawn close about the neck in the back, on the sides, or in front, according to the breeze; the weight of the tassel always holds it in the desired position.

A WIDE scarf of plain tulle edged all about with a plaited ruche of tulle is the newest and rarest thing in scarfs. For evening wear, or even for garden-parties, it is exceedingly picturesque.

bodice with surplice ends which tie in back to form a sash. The knickerbockers, which show below the skirt, have two elastic cordings in their shirrings to keep them in place. The rubber hat comes in many colorings, but is probably prettiest in yellow rubber with a dark blue disc in front, decorated with a blackbird.

The bathing-cape is a distinct feature of the bathing wardrobe this summer and is both practical and distinctive. The model shown at the lower right on page 85 is of a heavy wool jersey, particularly pretty in navy blue, with contrasting bands of colored khaki-kool. The rubber cap comes in many color combinations, but is shown with a dark blue top and a band of tan rubber with a fancy motif of tan and blue in front.

Both practical and attractive is the child's bathing-suit illustrated at the top of this page. Made of a heavy quality of knitted wool jersey in dark blue, striped with white, it has a belt of white cotton tape at the natural waist-line; this belt is fastened with a bone button, and three buttons fasten the suit in front. The shop which offers this child's suit has given the matter particular attention in order to insure excellent quality and good workmanship. The suit may be had in sizes for 4 to 8 years.

SWEATERS CLING ABOUT THE WAIST

The pull-on knitted sweater so constructed that it clings to the waist-line by means of a belt of a closer weave, has grown in popularity, and when this woven belt is covered by a loose sash, as in the sweater illustrated in the middle of page 85 at the right, it is far prettier. This sweater is hand-knit of Shetland wool and may be had in the natural shade (a neutral tan) and also in the popular flesh, rose, yellow, blue, or purple. Thick balls of worsted make a pretty ending to the sash, and the neck is cut in a sufficiently deep V to be becoming.

The milan sailor hat which appears with the sweater comes in attractive color combinations, the brim of one color, the crown of another; the underbrim matches the color of the crown. This hat is particularly pretty in a combination of tan and brown and also in a combination of natural color and rose. If one desires, it may be ordered in a solid color. The crown is fairly deep so that the hat may be worn far down on the head. A grosgrain band encircles the crown and ties in a bow at one side.

The packing of hats in a week-end case has been a puzzle to so many people that a clever woman has worked out a scheme by which one may virtually pick a hat entirely apart in order to pack it flat and may later put it together again invisibly. Illustrated at the upper left and right on page 85 are two hats, neither of which give any evidence, when worn, of this unusual feature. That at the right, a soft-brimmed linen hat, is particularly suited to wear with sweaters, and it comes in the widest variety of colorings, in linen, silk, or crash, samples of which may be had upon request. By means of feather-bone, the crown is held up, the head-size is de-finer, and the brim is kept in place. The other hat, combined of white visca braid and white satin, is intended for street wear. This, also, may be taken apart and packed flat. It may be ordered in any number of other colors.

AT FASHION'S FEET

No part of a costume is more important than the shoe. For street wear there is the pump of gray kid shown on the seat in the sketch at the bottom of this page; this pump may also be had in a dark tan with decorative perforations around the top and trimming the vamp; it has a pointed tongue. Shown at the left in the same sketch is a white buckskin pump for country wear. Perforated borders trim the tip, the vamp, and the upper part. The heel is of medium height. The tan oxford tie for street wear, shown in the middle, has the new medium height walking heel, and the vamp is outlined with perforations, as is the tip. At the extreme right is a high white buckskin shoe for sports wear. This, also, is trimmed with perforated lines; the heel and sole are of white rubber. The shoes illustrated come in exceptionally narrow widths to fit the slender foot; perfect fit is guaranteed.

At the same shop where these shoes are offered, hosiery may be had in a great variety of colors ranging in price from $1.25 to $3 a pair. To match slippers or gowns, hosiery may be ordered dyed in any color within twenty-four hours.

The footprints of summer will be after this order: (left) white buckskin pumps with perforated borders, $10; (middle) oxford ties for street wear, of black or tan Russia calf with the new medium heel, $10; (right) sports shoes of white buckskin with heel and sole of white rubber, $10; (on seat) pumps for street which may be had in gray or dark tan kid; $10

"The Arden Way"

Is the Modern Way of Scientific Complexion Treatment.

THE "Arden Way" of cleansing, nourishing and improving the skin is as diversified as the way of a good doctor, a good dentist or a good trained nurse—it is an individually prescribed treatment for every common blemish of the contour and skin. It fulfills its improving mission because it is the selected way and therefore the practical way.

With the nourishing, cleansing, revivifying Arden Venetian Preparations, Arden treatments are irresistible. Without Arden Venetian Preparations any treatment would be futile. For example, —If you have had a particularly hard spring, no end of war relief work and the usual social obligations, it would be a miracle if your face did not show the lines of tension and fatigue, or even a tendency to droop about the cheeks and chin. Diet? Rest? A Face Cream? Or the Arden Way, which in this case would mean treatments with the Arden Special Astringent, a magical blend of rare imported herbs which invigorates the unhealthy, sagging tissues, lifting them into place and tightening the skin. Better try the Arden Way before your face has aged irreparably. The Special Astringent is $3 a bottle.

In the case of a coarse, reddened skin with blackheads and blemishes about the nose and mouth, the uninformed woman will experiment with cold creams and try to hide the defects with powder, a combination which clogs the pores and aggravates the trouble. The woman who cares will use Venetian Pore Cream. Pore Cream purges the coarse, enlarged pores, reduces them to normal size, healing blemishes, refining the texture of the skin. It works a complete transformation, as do most Arden treatments. A Jar of Pore Cream is only $1.

The Venetian Muscle Oil will lubricate the muscles of the face, keeping them resilient and healthy. It is closely akin to the natural oils of the skin and, together with the Venetian Special Astringent, described above, makes a combination before which lines, wrinkles and deep hollows must vanish. The Muscle Oil is $4, $2 and $1 a bottle.

A perfect protection against sun and wind is Venetian Lille Lotion, a pure, medicinal liquid powder. It is astringent and aseptic, cures acne and flushing and is especially beneficial for an oily skin. It gives a lovely, natural finish to face, neck and arms and does not rub off in dancing. Incomparable for preventing and relieving sunburn and freckles. Four tints, Flesh, Cream, Rachel and White, $1 and $2.

WHAT THEY READ

AN author of several best sellers has come to the defense of his craft with the old assertion that he makes what men want and "the laborer is worthy of his hire." Now there are best sellers, and best sellers. Some of fifty and a hundred years ago are still bought and read, though more are utterly forgotten. The mothers and grandmothers of present young folk bought and read "The Wide, Wide World," the very title of which stirs all the fibres of romance in thousands of men and women past sixty. Those vanishing generations read also "Queechy," "The Initials," "John Halifax, Gentleman," "The Lamplighter," and a dozen others, most of them buried beyond recovery. If a best seller has no touch of greatness, it must be sentimental, romantic, religious, crudely humorous, or scandalous. Romance is the surest way to wealth in second- and third-rate fiction; sentimentality next, religion next, humor next, and scandal perhaps last of all, though there is no better way to advertise a novel than to have it blacklisted by the libraries and excluded from the United States mail. "The Initials" went well in England and America because it dealt with an unfamiliar civilization, that of Germany two generations ago. Mrs. Southworth poured out for a quarter-century a torrential stream of romance, which flowed to all parts of this country, and settled into stagnant pools throughout the south. "Uncle Tom's Cabin," crude in art, and historically misleading, appealed to both conscience and sentiment, and had also great political significance, so that it was a best seller in half a dozen languages. "Barriers Burned Away" and four or five other books by the same author, all now utterly neglected, were religious best sellers less than thirty years ago. "The Pilgrim's Progress" has been a best seller for two and a half centuries, because it appeals on the one hand to ardent Protestants, on the other to the lovers of great prose. Writing best sellers is profitable nowadays because we have in this country the largest and most prosperous reading public any nation ever knew. The authors of second- and third-rate best sellers have automobiles, costly country houses such as used to belong to millionaires only, and richly caparisoned libraries in which the industrious owners are photographed at their carved rosewood desks in the throes of composition. It is hardly short of criminal, of course, to write a designedly vicious book for profit. It is altogether disreputable to debase art for the sake of the dollars that come from men and women who are thus confirmed in their crude taste by "harmless" sentimental or romantic fiction. If all authors strive first for the automobile, the country house and the luxurious library, and none zealously seeks to give the public only his artistic best, the literature of the nation and of the time in which art is thus sacrificed to dollars will deservedly perish.

CHILDREN OF THE DESERT, by LOUIS DODGE, whose "Bonnie May" was a successful romance of the impossible, is another tale of folk as they never were or never will be, told in such clever fashion as almost to persuade the reader to accept the whole thing at its face value. This time Mr. Dodge lays his scene in Texas, on the Mexican border, and gives us as hero such a railway worker as one encounters nowhere outside of fiction, and a heroine who is perhaps, harder for some to accept, but on the whole more probable. There are besides, "bad men," a few local great folk, a charming lady killer from the east, greasers, and others. If you accept Mr. Dodge's terms, and permit him to hypnotize you into uncritical assent, you are likely to sit up all night with his story and feel no repentance next day. The tale is idealistic in its conception of the big, clean, God-fearing hero, in the fascinating, unmoral, and softly yielding heroine. Perhaps Mr. Dodge's worst sin against good art in this poignant little story is not the improbabilities of character, but rather the over-literary tone and style of the dialogue. Had he toned this down a few pegs, made his man and his woman less elegant in speech, less philosophic in attitude toward life, all else might have been forgiven. Meanwhile he has probably reckoned well upon the persistent popularity of mere melodramatic romance. There are good and bad things of this kind, and none can rank high as literary art, but "Children of the Desert" is about as good as such things are made. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; $1.35 net.)

WHAT HE LEAST EXPECTED, by HOLWORTHY HALL, reads like a very long and uncommonly clever college exercise in what the professors call "narration." It is undergraduate all over, saturated with the spirit of the Harvard "Gold Coast," lit with the audacious humor of phrase and idea current in the gaiest undergraduate circles, and in its style, richly reminiscent of professorial counsel as to method and artifice. The author is never quite willing to say the simplest thing in an ordinary fashion; he is a hater of the obvious, a persistent seeker after the unexpected phrase. Unhappily his passion for the recherche (the poverty of the vernacular drives one abroad to find the term that shall express his method) is not always restrained by intelligent self-criticism. But there are positively clever things to outweigh these blemishes of a self-conscious style, and the story is an entertaining extravaganza told with spirit, with speed, and with the art to maintain much of the mystery almost to the end. (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company; $1.50 net.)

UPSIDONIA, by ARCHIBALD MARSHALL, attempts once more the old "Through-the-Looking-glass" trick of taking the hero and the reader with him out of familiar every-day land into a place of inverted ideals and customs. This time the story is told for the entertainment and instruction, not of children but of grown folk. The way to Upsidonia lies through a cave in an ordinary

Meet the Fels-Naptha Home Maker. Sympathetic, kindly, she understands woman and her problems. This month this is her message to you:

"A house is just four walls. A home is four walls built 'round a mother. And the less time a mother needs to devote to house cleaning, the more time she has for home making."

LET'S consider what working with Fels-Naptha soap means to the home: shorter hours and better results, more leisure for things worth while.

It makes an eight-hour day of the new kind equal to a ten- or twelve-hour day of the old kind—the kind that goes with hard scrubbing and rubbing, where muscles do so much of the work.

Fels-Naptha now takes the place of muscle in a million households. It will help you, too.

Suds from Fels-Naptha soap are white. They keep white clothes white. This is a white goods summer—that should mean a Fels-Naptha summer.

Fels & Co., Philadelphia

Try the Fels-Naptha Way Once—and It's Your Way All the Time

Wash white dresses at home, this way: Wet the garment; rub Fels-Naptha soap on it. Roll it up and let it soak thirty minutes in cool or warm water. Rinse; rinse thoroughly. That's all.

limestone region of England. Once emerging from the gloom of the under-world the explorer finds himself in a land that looks like any ordinary English countryside, but he speedily discovers that its economic, political, and social ideals are not those of England, not those of any civilized community elsewhere, though the community is civilized. Here poverty is respectable and wealth disreputable. The sons of noblemen are eager to enlist as employees of the state in the most menial and laborious occupations, and servants haughtily decline to associate upon terms of equality with their employers. He that offers alms to a poor man is arrested as guilty of lawbreaking, while a thief, always a man of wealth and social importance, incurs no punishment. In this fantastic world, Mr. Marshall, who has been likened to Anthony Trollope, places his realistic puppets and manages to carry out a story with plot, incident, love, and humor. "Culbut" is the slightly modified French name of Upsidonia, a name that has a picturesque popular translation in English forbidden to ears polite. This book is good enough fooling, and in spite of its flavor of the pot-boiler, it has some lessons for the world in which we live. (New York: Dodd, Mead and Company; $1.50 net.)

THE ROAD TO UNDERSTANDING, by ELEANOR H. PORTER, comes from the publishers with the naive assurance that it "has all the sweetness, inspiration, and human appeal of 'Just David,' and is in addition a real love story"; now "Just David" was a best seller, so you know what to expect. This new story is conventional in plot and incident, romantic, sentimental, and all that "mid-Victorian" implies to the present generation. If you like sugar candy, this is just the confection for your palate. The young Bostonian of the proper set who marries the pretty girl of very different origin and breeding is a favorite with the makers of local fiction, and Miss Porter has been merciless in her study of contrasts both in the young married couple, and in another man and woman of differing social strata. The author's effects are obtained by that rather strong underscoring employed by one who suspects that the audience is a bit impervious to subtler methods. In the end the story justifies its title by a very old-fashioned romantic device, but to anticipate the dénouement would possibly spoil the book for some of its prospective hundred thousand readers. The publishers have added to the attractions of the tale four clever drawings by Mary Green Blumenschein, richly but softly colored, and charming glimpses of Boston over the roofs decorate the fly-leaves. (Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin Company; $1.40 net.)

REFLECTIONS ON WOMAN AND OTHER IMPORTANT TOPICS

WOMAN, by VANCE THOMPSON, a little volume in a breathless style, tempts one to paraphrase a famous line of Kipling's somewhat in this fashion, "and I didn't learn about women from 'im." Mr. Thompson puts a mighty solemn face upon the whole business in a preface telling how slowly and unwillingly he has come to the writing of his book, and then gives the reader something over two hundred pages of highly entertaining matter in rather cheap style without a single original idea. He merely agrees with most of those who have thought seriously about the woman question, that women are entitled to like liberty with men, but he utterly fails to note, what some of the most liberal of the deeper thinkers believe—that the human race will come to a somewhat sudden end upon earth, unless, as seems probable, most women who have liberty of choice decide to exercise the one high right which men can not exercise, that of being mothers. Mr. Thompson believes that he has really got rid of the superior masculine attitude toward women, and has freely accepted the humbler place in the scheme of things that all intelligent husbands sooner or later accept, but alas, he shows himself just as eager to dictate how women shall exercise their rights, as the veriest masculine tyrant ever was to deny them any sort of liberty. He would rob them of their immodest skirts, and have them dress in such fashion as plainly to proclaim themselves bipeds, and he would insist that they try as nearly as possible to take on the physical characteristics of men rather than of what he would not have us call the "gentler sex." The old Adam will come out even in the masculine feminist, and the innocent Mr. Thompson, in suddenly proclaiming to the world the knowledge new to him, but getting a bit old to some of us who have followed the trend of radical thought, graciously hands down the message to the sex which he professes to regard with awe and something like apprehension. As a compendium of modern radical thought on the woman question Mr. Thompson's book has some value in spite of an annoying style, but if he really thinks he is getting on the band wagon in time to share in the glory of the approaching victory, he may be sadly disappointed. The best single utterance in the book, though it is entirely without originality of thought, declares: "The sacred bond between the male and the female is love and if you put anything else in its place, you are creating psychic and physical degradation, no matter by what name you call the relationship," which is a cumbersome way of saying that neither prayer of priest nor word of magistrate can hallow a loveless marriage. (New York: E. P. Dutton and Company; $1.25 net.)

THE HUMAN DRIFT, by JACK LONDON, illustrates once more that not only the evil that men do lives after them, but also the less than their best, if they happen to be authors, is apt to be published after their death by publishers eager to reap a harvest from almost any kind of seed. This little volume certainly does not show the brilliant and highly sensational Jack London at his best. It is a miscellany not particularly true to title, a working up of things that the author would perhaps not have woven into consecutive matter had his waning strength not prevented him from going forth in search of new things. The opening essay, which gives title to the volume, deals brilliantly though unconvincingly with a subject that always had its fascination for the author, primitive man and his evolutions into a higher self through struggle and bloodshed. There is more of the old Jack London, who was the young Jack London, in this essay than in aught else that goes to make the volume. "Small-Boat Sailing" is another congenial subject that the author handles with capacity. There is an intelligent estimate of "Dana's Two Years Before the Mast" in an essay that would be the better for a little of Dana's simplicity. "Nothing That Ever Came to Anything" is a dull narrative of actual experience, illustrating the mañana habit of Latin-America. Two playlets finish the volume. (New York: The Macmillan Company; $1.25 net.)

VIRGINIA VILLAGE, by E. S. NADAL, is, in effect, a volume of reminiscent essays with an autobiographical introduction. Mr. Nadal is probably the only Methodist preacher's son ever to serve as the Secretary of the United States Legation at London. Perhaps less alien to his origin is his passionate love of horses. His autobiographical matter is often trivial, as the garrulity of a man well on toward old age, but elsewhere in the volume is much vigorous and interesting matter, perhaps of earlier origin than the autobiography, marked by no great virtue of style except simplicity. It is interesting that Mr. Nadal's touch with the great world abroad did not serve to taint his genuine American democracy. He has some good stories to tell of the distinguished men whom he met in London, and they are told without the slightest sign of egotism or snobishness. Mr. Nadal, however, is more at home in his native land than in Europe, and his best matter in this genuinely interesting and significant volume is that dealing with various aspects of Virginia, Kentucky, and Texas. Those who love horses better than automobiles will take joy in Mr. Nadal's many discussions of the horse. There are interesting impressions of Lincoln and Lowell; there are singularly pleasing accounts of journeys in Virginia, and there is a delightful closing essay about Virginia women. Mr. Nadal has made a book of unusual flavor. (New York: The Macmillan Company; $1.75 net.)

IDLE DAYS IN PATAGONIA is another of those long neglected and at length revived volumes of W. H. HUDSON, the Englishman who loved the south-temperate zone of this continent in the days when much of that vast region was pampas and forest, almost vacant save for savage aborigines, or a few white ranchers and their cowboys. There may be room for a difference of opinion as to the artistic value of Mr. Hudson's fictional stories cast against the background of wild Argentina, but it is hard to believe that any intelligent reader with a sense of style and a feeling for life in the open can fail to find such a book as this delightful. The author, who was shipwrecked on the coast of Patagonia, whither he was journeying with intent to study the birds of that wild country, puts into this book not only a good deal of rare charm and interest about the objects of his search, but far more about the scattered inhabitants, the beasts and serpents, the scenery, and along with this, delightful fancies and intelligent comment based upon what he saw, heard, and felt. The wild cowboy's scorn of eye-glasses gave place to delight in them when accident proved to him that his failing sight needed just the lenses used by his civilized acquaintance. There is a quaint and significant chapter on eyes not immediately concerned with the author's explorations in Patagonia. There is another on the "exiled dogs" of that region; there is another on the perfume of the evening primrose, which he found growing wild on the pampas. Best of all, however, are the lovely passages expressing the author's delight in bird song, in the loneliness of the wild, in the delicious coming of what Whitman so gloriously calls the "rosy and elastic dawn." This is a book to treasure against those lonely days and nights that give one the excuse to forget all else in yielding oneself to the charm of a man who saw and felt as few see and feel, and had the art to put himself and his emotions into unpretentiously beautiful prose. (New York: E. P. Dutton and Company; $1.50 net.)

EMPIRICISTS DISCUSS THE WAR

AMERICAN WORLD POLICIES, by WALTER E. WEYL, embodies a score of essays grouped under special topics, but all in more or less relation to the world war and its consequences to ourselves. Mr. Weyl is neither pessimist nor optimist, but rather a hopeful if somewhat skeptical experimentalist, to use a gentler term than empiricist. He sees with President Wilson that we must take a share in any future world war that may come; he hopes with President Wilson that our influence as a party to the present war may be effectual for the promotion of "economic and political integration" throughout the world, the expression or the implication in every important recent utterance of the President, and shining all through his war message of early April. In the opening group of essays Mr. Weyl recognizes our easy optimism as to our ability to keep out of the European conflict with its dark diplomacy and frequent threats of war, and our inability to maintain hereafter the isolation of the part. Imperialism, by which he means the constant effort of a nation either through war or peaceful penetration, to extend its influence and dominion, he discusses in seven chapters. The chapters on economic internationalism show the author in his most liberal and hopeful mood, as his discussion of the world's food problem seems to indicate his somewhat narrow politico-economic limitations. The book has much significance at this moment: it may seem both better and worse after the present war is over. (New York: The Macmillan Company; $2.25 net.)

THE WAR AFTER THE WAR, by ISAAC F. MARCOSSON, is one of those hard, glittering, business-like books, by a square-headed, definite sort of person, free from illusion, whom the idealist finds unendurable, but whose ruthless philosophy is worth reading if only that it may be refuted. Mr. Marcossion thinks a trade-war will inevitably follow the war of gun and bomb and bayonet, and that we shall be as little prepared for the one as for the other. Every protectionist will agree to this notion, and every free trader will reject it with scorn. Perhaps the most helpful chapter in the book for the American business man is that concerned with our blundering stupidity in attempting to extend trade with France. We have shown a similar stupidity in our dealings with Latin America, and in the case of those neighbors on this continent we have added to stupidity the unpardonable discourtesy of unconcealed contempt. A good deal of Mr. Marcossion's book is given up to a eulogistic biographical sketch of Lloyd George, a portrait of whom forms the frontispiece, and there follows a brief chapter in praise of General Joffre. Mr. Marcossion's book smells a bit too strongly of the stock exchange to be a sweet savor in the nostrils of those who prefer some other highways to Wall Street. (New York: John Lane Company; $1.25 net.)

SONG

A LONELY FLUTE, by ODELL SHEPARD, has one quality rare in current verse, rare in verse or prose of any period,—pathos untainted with sentimentality. Mr. Shepard attains his pathos without apparent effort so that it comes with a surprise upon the reader, like Rawdon Crawley's terrified contrition when he bumps his child's head against the ceiling, or Becky's enforced admiration of Rawdon when he chokes Lord Steyne. Other qualities, the common possession of poets, great and small, Mr. Shepard also has, as for example, feeling for nature and a happy phrasing of its loveliness, though not quite the happiest and most condensed. His lyricism is agreeable, though again not quite the perfect marriage of sound and sense now and again vouchsafed to the greatest lyrists. A characteristic poem, and one that happily fixes in words what all imaginative persons feel at sight of a sail off coast in the edge of the night is that entitled "Nightfall." "Housemates" ends with a poignant touch, as also "The Watcher of the Skies," but both of these savor of that unhuman, not inhuman, something that comes to us from contemplation of the starlit heavens. The pathos of "Birds of Passage" is truly human. (Continued on page 120)

SILK UNDERVESTS ARE COMING DOWN
ONE—TWO—THREE—FOUR INCHES!

DAME FASHION, when she ordered us into the long hip corset, took no thought of our rapidly disappearing undervest. Hasn't it slipped up and up, despite our frantic efforts to keep at least one tiny inch below the corset—haven't we felt for all the world like the kiddie whose mother did not use wool soap?

No need for desperate tugs and clutches now, though. The ever-alert designers of Vanity Fair glove-silk underwear have added four priceless inches to the length of the ordinary undervest. It comes in bodice top with ribbon shoulder straps—nice wide ribbon, too.

When you wear Vanity Fair, silk underwear becomes an economy. These dainty undersilks are firmly, closely woven and will more than outwear your heavier under-apparel. It's so satisfying to be luxurious and economical at the same time!

Union Suits that are glove fitting, envelopes either trimmed or of tailored simplicity, sets of camisoles and knickers that make "petti-skirties" unnecessary, robes-de-nuit and pajamas alluringly dainty—all of these are fashioned of Vanity Fair glove silk in addition to that "plus-four-inch" vest that is taking the feminine world by storm.

WHAT THEY READ

Perhaps Mr. Shepard could come nearer than most of our brave young poets to catching the wild sweet connotation of the far "honk" that falls from the scarce seen "V" of the migrant geese amid the downy dusk of the evening sky. "Orioles" has much of the best that Mr. Shepard can give us, though it lacks his rarest quality. This little volume is distinguished above most current verse for the very reason that it makes no presumptuous pretension to "newness" of form. (Boston and New York: Houghton Mifflin Company; $1.25 net.)

THE BROKEN WING, SONGS OF LOVE, DEATH, AND DESTINY, 1915-1916, by SAROJINI NAIDU, comes from India accompanied with the praise of other volumes by the same author from the mouths of Arthur Symonds and Edmund Gosse, and an enthusiastically written publisher's notice on the carton. Since India has a population of nearly 300,000,000, of whom no small percentage write poetry, the occidental world of critics and readers must be a little cautious in holding out encouragement to these exotic verse makers, for they are amazingly prolific, as one may guess from the output of Tagore, and the price of print paper has become a fearsome thing. The chorus of not too discriminating praise for oriental verse has put occidental critics into a perfect shiver of uncritical alarm lest they neglect some one of the unsuspected great masters suddenly sprung upon us from Bengal, Ceylon, or Calcutta, and the reading public is in imminent danger of making this strange and sometimes cloyingly sweet outpouring of the east a mere fad. The woman who writes this slender volume uses the English language as if it were her own vernacular, but reflects in her verse the ideals, scenery, flora, and fauna of India. Since "gulmohurs," "champaks," "molsari," "neem," "pipal-trees," "sirisha flowers" mean naught to most occidental readers, the poet loses some of her effect in employing such terms. She has, however, a really brilliant technique, above that of most contemporary poets in these parts, and when she writes of Indian patriotism she feels or simulates an impressive passion. It remains to be said, however, that almost any poetess of recognized quality on either side of the Atlantic could have written most of this volume after having become acclimated to India. There are beautiful things here, but there is nothing great. Here is one of the lady's best stanzas:

*"An ox-cart stumbles upon the rocks,
And a wistful music pursues the breeze
From a shepherd's pipe as he gathers his flocks*

*Under the pipal-trees.
And a young Banjara driving her cattle Lifts up her voice as she glitters by
In an ancient ballad of love and battle
Set to the beat of a mystic tune,
And the faint stars gleam in the eastern sky
To herald a rising moon."*

(New York: John Lane Company; $1.25 net.)

AFTERNOON, by EMILE VERHAEREN, translated by CHARLES R. MURPHY, contains thirty of the Belgian poet's love songs, a cycle of rare beauty. Mr. Murphy has triumphed over the difficulty of putting a poet of high rank and subtle significance into alien verse, though his triumph is a little tantalizing, for one reads most of the time with a sense of the faint mist that interposes between the poet and the reader by reason of the new medium, which of necessity can not be truly transparent. The feeling is here, however, and there are perfect lines that seem to give us all that the poet sought to convey. Water, whether falling in dense skeins of dark rain, or moving itself gently in the garden lake beneath the breeze, plays an important part in the decorative effect of these poems. The pure passion of these verses few poets have compassed, and there is nowhere the touch of the unwholesome or of unleavened fleshliness. Again, the living realism of the garden pictures softly bodied forth is one of the loveliest incidents of the poems. One has the sense of looking as a privileged spectator into a jealously enclosed little eden, odorous with rose and lily and violet, delirious with blooming color, visited by soft airs, soothing rains, nourishing sunlight, and inhabited by a pair perfectly mated,—a new glimpse, as it were, of the first parents before the "fall." Here are three stanzas of poem No. XII:

*"It is the pleasant hour when lamps are lit;
Calmness and consolation over all;
The silences so deep that one could hear
A feather fall.*

*It is the hour when the beloved comes,
Like to the sweetly soft and low
Wandering mist upon the breeze, Sweetly slow.*

*She speaks no word at first—and yet I hark,
Hark to the soul of her, surprise
Its gleam and dark,
And then I kiss her eyes."*

THE HIGH CEREMONIAL of MARRIAGE in NORWAY

was much admired, but it was unanimously repudiated as wedding raiment.
We progressed through more and more festive garb, until I began to realize that in Norway the hour has nothing to do with the formality of dress; it is the greatness of the occasion, whatever the hour, which here governs correct attire. At last, a grande toilette of white tulle caught with fine strings of pearls, with an overskirt drapery of soft white velvet folds and the further recommendation of a long train, was unanimously acclaimed as befitting the wedding. The very idea of donning it in daylight made me tremble, but it would be daylight at night, too, so I decided to hold my breath and see whether a mere American could retain any vestige of charm when appearing in broad daylight in formal evening costume.

Then came the real feast, for these girls unpacked for me the old trunks stored in the attic for many years, and from them came such quaint garments, all of depressing gravity but beautifully embroidered. There was their mother's wedding-dress, all stiff prim flutes and plaitings of Swiss muslin, with a great fan-shaped train with set draperies flouncing into a perky bustle at the top and a severe bodice lined and boned and retaining a very distinct shape of its own. We had the same styles, I suppose, for in Civil War daguerreotypes I am sure that I have seen the very image of that dress, so very demure, so very dignified, and so artificially exacting of the wearer. I wonder that its tyranny was ever accepted in Norway.

Finally, from a case all by itself, came a wonder of elegance, a peasant's wedding-dress of olden days, yet not so olden either, for it retired from active service only in this generation and came into the possession of the father of these new relatives of mine through his taking over some government office. The material must have come from Spain (I find so much that is gorgeous and that the Norwegians consider beautiful has come from Spain), for it was a satin brocade of such elegance in design and richness in coloring as was never made in Norway, and it was of a weight actually to stand alone. The soft surface was divided by broad silver stripes into an effect of panels that supplied a ground of royal blue, from which flower baskets in riotous color stood forth in high relief. Of course, this costume was of far greater grandeur than those worn by people of the nobility at the time in Norway (at that time or to-day, for that matter), and its final effect was enhanced by an underguimpe of sheer linen with a collar and cuffs of finest needlework. The fashioning of its gores, ingenious devices for altering and adjusting its dimensions, would seem to have taxed all Paris to design, for this costume belonged to no one bride but was an affair of state, rented for the great occasion by successive brides, year after year. Of course, only the richest brides might procure the use of this dress, as it rented for the sum of twenty crowns, which went to keep up the costume.

THE GATHERING OF THE CLANS

The practicality of thus securing a wedding gown is typical; the "immediate reality" about everything is the most striking characteristic of Norwegian life;
it is in the very quality of the Norwegian atmosphere. Every detail remains sharp and clear cut, no matter how powerful some vast amalgamating experience may be. Nothing blends; all remains distinct and compelling. The three days of the wedding have no crescendo sweeping all the eddies into one current; rather, the experience frames itself into a brilliant mosaic with nothing suppressed.

On the Friday preceding the wedding, we again disposed ourselves and all our baggage, with the additional company of two cousins and one uncle from this last house, in a little steamer that took us to the end of the lake. Here we were joined by many others of this family flock, collected from Larvik, Christiania, Bergen, and Molde, as well as from Sweden and Denmark. With them was the bridegroom himself, so handsome and so distraught, with all his cares remembered and commissions forgotten. As soon as we were settled in the train, he undid his collar and shirt front, collapsed like a swooning Lou Tellegen, and gave himself over alternately to nonsense and despair.
As no one of the now extensive party was willing to be separated from the others, we were all packed into one enormous compartment all the way to our destination of Elverum, and the result was a true confusion of tongues, for each member of this tribe was like a steam-roller in himself and without the slightest notion of subordination.

A DENSELY MARRIED POPULATION

The arrival at Elverum was no anti-climax, for there were more of the soskinde, who had come by motor from the far north; then, of course, there were all the soskinde of the bride's household there to meet us; altogether, they made a gay assortment of wedded ones. This must surely be the most densely married population on the globe.

A long row of little phaetons hitched to little ponies awaited us at Elverum, and into these tiny vehicles we were dealt,
two by two. The result, to my untutored eyes, was amusing to a disgraceful extent, for the people were so big and the beasties so small that I had much ado to hide my mirth.

We arrived at the bride's home, and alighted directly across the green from her house, at a hotel which had been engaged entire to house the family of the bridegroom, and no boarding-school on a lark could compete with the fun and merriment. It was really a beautiful place in itself, this hotel, and the rooms had been further embellished with beautiful linen and real lace, flowers, candelabra, and lingerie pillows from the private houses. My rooms seemed a spacious, delft blue, padded silence, deeply upholstered on every surface. Even the bed, which evidently began life with a brass framework, was richly upholstered with blue silk, like a divan, and the great down puff was of the same material, with an elaborate sheet turned down over it and buttoned securely like a crisp cuff. But, alas, I saw my room very little, and my memory of it is blurred into a sort of whirling spray of haste and dizziness, with vivid blue and white breakers seething around me. I leave to the imagination the "high jinks" which can be thought up by a whole hotel full of one family, who, now once more reunited, forgot the intervening years and knew that they were grown up only by the freedom that maturity gave them to play pranks they never would have dared to perpetrate when they were small.

In the formal part of this hotel, on the first floor, was a series of small dining-rooms, in which were served the dinner that night (Friday) and the breakfast, tea, and supper of Saturday and Sunday, while on the second floor was a huge banquet hall reserved for the wedding-dinner on Saturday. Dinner Friday night was an avalanche of hospitality, and each man was provided with a consignment of cigars and cigarettes to last the three days.
We all played games on the green until bedtime, and that, also, was a lark in itself, for the groom and his groomsmen came serenading everyone, and at the end they all came in to say good-night. Such crazy children. I shouldn't have liked it at all if I hadn't been tipped off beforehand, by some one who evidently had doubts of my sporting blood, so that I had all my properties called for the scene, and was arrayed like Du Barry awaiting the court, befrilled in all the most un-Norwegian furbelows I could assemble. The bridegroom looked distraught, however, with eyes seeing nothing, and I realized how long it would be before normal peace would be restored to his dear naïve soul,—so long-drawn-out are Norwegian weddings.

THE WEDDING-DAY

The wedding-day dawned clear and beautiful and warm, so that for breakfast I could wear a real garden-party costume of lavender organdy and lace, and for once I had something that was really admired,—a garden hat of violet straw that hung on the arm by its streamers, like a basket, and could actually be used as such for gathering flowers and berries. This was admired because it was understood, and was called praktisk, a word which signifies a combination of "convenient" and "ingenious." Nothing is considered interesting for its beauty alone in Norway; it must have a usefulness, a pragmatic, efficient excellence; in fact, that is its beauty, that constitutes its charm to the Norse mind.

We spent the morning gathering greens for the church and doing little errands at the village. At noon there was a sort of grand high tea, of which we partook all together, and then followed the mysterious silence which shrouds the dressing hour preceding a great festivity. It was indeed a strange sensation to deck myself in draperies of white tulle and velvet in the afternoon sunlight, but the excitement of all the other preparations going on under the same roof penetrated to me like a mystical intoxication and lent a certain glow to the performance. The men, who were awaiting us on the veranda when we came down, were all in full dress, and we drove to the church in the same quaint little equipages of the day before, with a stolid peasant up on the coachman's box. The church was my first experience of a Lutheran service of any kind, and it came as a surprise to find it so ritualistic.

THE LUTHERAN CEREMONY

The two families occupied half of the nave of the church, and the galleries and outside aisles were filled with townspeople and peasants from all the valley round. We entered in order of age, two by two, marching all the way up the aisle so that all might observe us thoroughly; this was quite a trial in itself and made us feel very much a part of the rites. The two old mothers knelt in the chancel, one at either side of the altar, and seemed part of a picture, with their white lace caps and bowed heads. It was something new to me, this unconscious pageantry, unrehearsed and naïve instead of fancifully conceived and theatrically executed, and it gave a strange sense of a substantial richness of life.

The altar was superb; behind it, rose a vast painting of Christ performing the miracle of the wine at Cana; against it, framing it, were the myriad points of light of great candles in marvelous candelabra of massive silver and jewels, such as one might imagine in the Vatican. The draperies of the altar were of deep wine colored velvet, over which magnificent lace stood out in snowy relief. Flowers formed a drift of the same snowy whiteness along the railing, and from the foot of the altar down over the chancel steps was wonderful silvery fur, deep and shining, with a border of silver fringe. Then there was the priest in his heavy vestments, looking for all the world like a medieval courtier, with his pointed beard and great ruff.

The wedding party entered with great solemnity. The bride was of a real fairy type, (the only one I have seen in Norway), as frail and ethereal as a dream shape in her tulle draperies, with a wreath of vivid green myrtle around her golden hair. Everyone wept after the entrance, for there was a long wait with nothing else to do, and the great organ was too much for any nerves. Then the minister embarked upon a long monologue which recounted the responsibilities and tribulations of marriage; he read everything ever written about that cursed estate, and ended with the conclusion that it was ordained of God. My limited knowledge of Norwegian did not grasp the dire significance of his words, of course, and, as they were delivered in a sweet and gentle voice, and with an almost humorous twinkle in his eye, I remained fairly happy among the saddened throng. After this was over the general atmosphere lightened, but the ceremony itself was very long and thorough; there was nothing precipitate or breathless about it, as with us, and it bore the unmistakable and unforgettable stamp of permanency.

A SIX-HOUR BANQUET

At the end of the ceremony, we drove to the banquet hall, and an imposing sight it presented; the great sombre room, all of wood with walls and ceiling of heavy beams, was draped in soft silk Norwegian flags and lighted with torches. The table formed a horseshoe around three sides and in the middle, the bride and groom sat in state. How shall I describe this feudal banquet? I can not spell the names of the foods, and the quantity can best be expressed by saying that the feasting lasted continuously from a little after five until eleven, with a soft pearl-like daylight persisting the while, like a fleecy enveloping fog, forming a background to all the guests, while their faces were lighted by multiple candelabra at every fourth place the whole table round. No scene could have been more radiantly beautiful or more thrilling, more virile in its color or psychology; indeed, even if one closed one's eyes, the effect of volume was only heightened, for this is a land of male voices. All of the speeches, toasts, drinking songs, and cheers, were by the men, and not one woman raised her voice in all that vast assembly; each plied her silent concentrated toasts to all in turn.

At the end, the most distinguished and impressive member of the family read aloud the telegrams of congratulation that arrived during the banquet, to the number of one hundred and seventy-eight. And strangest of all, as we left the hall of revelry (so high is the voltage of the individual Norwegian), not one face showed the slightest trace of fatigue. The men arranged themselves in groups on the green, according to their college years, and sang beautiful richly harmonized music, while we dressed for the dance. Twilight was gathering, and by twelve o'clock it was really dark enough for the brilliant ball gowns. Strange paradox it was of feudal environment and of atmosphere and costumes modern even to the detail of a modish hair-dresser, come up from Christiania especially for the occasion of the wedding.

One of the women came in when her toilette was complete, to chat with me as I dressed. I spoke of the strangeness, to me, of the male predominance at a wedding, of all events so much the province of the bride.

"Oh, but her brother spoke for her," she said.

"Yes, and for yourself, would you be satisfied with that?"

"No," she admitted, "of the feelings and emotions I have," here she made a heroic gesture of deep sentiment, "had I twice as many brothers as I have, none of them could speak for me."

"Do you think these deep feelings should be expressed?"

She hesitated, "Well, perhaps not,"—at last.

"They would not be understood."

"Not by the women?" I asked.

"Oh, the women! The women understand without expressing themselves."

This silenced me for some moments, and I watched her richly colored face with its heroic and primitive expression, so charged with a certain smoldering quality under all her calmness.

"Do you think you give your men a chance?" I asked.

"It certainly sounds as if they were given a chance," she flashed a resplendent smile. "It is lovely to hear them sing."

"I meant at understanding you," I insisted.

She waited a long time. "I do not think it possible," she smiled wanly and then very amusingly added, "I have a theory that perhaps they would not sing so well."

She chose for me a dress of vivid gold, which proved to be a good choice, as the splendid decorations and ribbons worn here and there by the old men and the scarlet coats of the young military officers formed a gorgeous setting. The ball consisted largely of folk dances, in which all, young and old, took part. At three o'clock, a candle-lit supper hailed the dawn, and it proceeded with—most unusual of all—old, old folk lore and ballads, sung as solos, one after the other, by these stalwart young Vikings. It was amazing to see each one standing alone and fearless, without the slightest self-consciousness before all those eyes, and I have yet to see one refuse to sing when he is asked. But, of course, the eyes that gaze at him are unconscious, too; the song and the voice and the singer are a part of the community's soul. Here, again, I am struck by the strangely high amateur standard in this land of Norway. It is an absolute ritual of life, the speech of the people; in fact, a professional standard holds an insignificant position relatively. But no woman, it must be remembered, raised her voice in all this. Thus ended the wedding ceremonies, and we all slept like a fallen army. J. P.

that not a single button be unbuttoned, and that the hat be worn with the brim horizontal to the ground.

However, Plattsburg and these summer camps may be regarded merely as articles de luxe; the real thing is so very different. In the Spanish war, those of our boys who went to Cuba and saw active service, pined for the very necessities of life in a terrible summer climate, and there was no time for "dolling up" or playing soldiers. There was a taste of this also on the border last summer, when the rough life took the starch out of our soldiers, who were all too unused to primitive conditions. The chief dangers in camp life arise from bad sanitation and the change of diet. Typhoid is one of our most dread enemies, and the drinking water is frequently bad. But at the regular training camps, there is nearly every modern convenience and luxury, except perhaps steam heat, which one does not need, and private baths. There is a touch of savage in most of us, and even in times of peace, we delight once in a while to return to the primitive. To be a consistent rookie, one must smoke a pipe whenever it is possible. The men in the trenches crave for tobacco and for sweets, principally chocolate, we are told. An American woman cleverly hit on the idea of sending chewing-gum to Tommy Atkins and the poilu. Chewing-gum means more to the men in the trenches than we who look upon its use as a plebeian habit, can realize. I should advise, also, the purchase of several of the little manuals concerning the service on land and sea. I believe these can be had for twenty-five and fifty cents each, and include "Flags and How to Fly Them," a subject which, even in times of universal peace, is fascinating because it embraces so much of international etiquette which is not generally known.

We should pay some attention to dress, even if we are to face a crisis. We must eat, and we must clothe ourselves. If we are in Rome, we must do as the Romans do, and for those who are at present civilians, the adoption of military uniforms or naval, would only make us appear jackdaws borrowing peacock's plumes. I was amused to see the top and pot hats with bowl brims come into vogue about Eastertide. Last year, a friend, who wore a derby built on this block, wore it only once, the day he landed from England; it made him so conspicuous that he at once went to an American shop and bought himself a proper hat. By this time, the straws are in full bloom, although more men than usual will cling to soft felt hats as long as possible. The bow ties are in striped light silks and pongees and are in consequence rather gay, as there are many variations. Foulards for summer wear still hold their own. Although I do not care for bandanna handkerchiefs, I wore, one summer in the country, some bandanna bowknot ties in reds and yellows. They are gay, I confess, but always smart. My summer costume for the country, except on special occasions, is an unbelted golf coat and white flannel trousers. I really approve of white flannel suits. The only objection I have to the much-liked pongee suit is that even the best of them lose their shape so soon. Even if one has a good man, the constant pressing will be too much of a strain. One can imagine the damage done. Good clothes will always take their shape if hung properly, just as good boots never wrinkle if put on their trees and kept there when not in use.

in the elaboration of vulgar, cheap, and trivial material.

THE MORNINGSIDE PLAYERS

The Morningside Players deserve to be commended for their second production of the season, which was shown at the Comedy Theatre on April 22, 24, and 25. The program was made up of four one-act plays, all of which had been composed by special students at Columbia University; and most of the acting was contributed also from the student-body of this institution. Through the efforts of a little group of people led by Mr. Hatcher Hughes, our largest university has found a voice in the concerted theatre of this country.

The first item on the bill was a sketch of character, called "Hattie," by Elva De Pue. A working-girl who had no child and who had lost her only immediate chance of being married was shown in contrast with another working-woman who had a baby which the heroine pathetically envied. This piece was followed by a comedy called "One a Day," by Caroline Briggs. The scene was set somewhere along the western front of the Great War; and the characters were an Irishman, a Cockney, an American, the Prince of Wales, and the Crown Prince of Prussia. The author exhibited a situation which suggested many clever sallies of amusing satire.

The third play was "Markheim," an adequate dramatization by Zillah K. MacDonald of Robert Louis Stevenson's impressive story; and the fourth item was a comedy by Elmer L. Reizenstein entitled "The Home of the Free." All four of these plays have been published in a single volume, by Frank Shay and Company. They are worthy of being read, not merely because of their intrinsic interest, but also because of the indication which they give of the knocking of a younger generation at the door.

The acting of all these plays was adequate; and the occasion was distinctly creditable to Mr. Hatcher Hughes and to The Morningside Players.

MR. AND MRS. BARLOW

An unusual type of entertainment was offered at the Punch and Judy Theatre on the afternoon of April 12 by Mr. and Mrs. Samuel L. M. Barlow. Mr. Barlow, who is a son of City Magistrate Peter Barlow, a well-known figure in New York society, is a musical composer, and Mrs. Barlow is a diseuse. Mr. Barlow played several of his own compositions, and Mrs. Barlow recited many poems, both in French and in English. Several of her recitations were accompanied at the piano by incidental music composed and rendered by her husband and collaborator. Mrs. Barlow is endowed by nature with an excellent ear, and she has been thoroughly trained in the French school of recitation. Her reading is singularly beautiful. She is more successful in her French than in her English numbers, because she shows a tendency to read the English language as if it were French. Her facial expression is luminous and natural and unselfconscious, but her gestures are a little angular and jerky and constrained. Mr. Barlow, in his compositions, shows an appreciable gift for melody; and he plays them with spontaneity and ease. Considered all in all,

Sarony

Marion Davies is just as easy to look at and listen to as ever in "Oh Boy!," the musical comedy that simply can't stop being a huge success this joint recital by Mr. and Mrs. Barlow afforded a great deal of unusual delight to an aesthetically minded audience.

"HIS LITTLE WIDOWS"

"His Little Widows" is described, on the program, not as "a musical comedy" but as "a comedy with music"; and the implied distinction bids fair to become notable in the near future. This piece might be acted as a "straight" farce; for it is constructed with unusual coherence. The fundamental fabric has merely been embroidered by the interpolation of songs and dances and musical ensembles, each of which is reasonably motivated. The play, which was written by Mrs. Rida Johnson Young, is not particularly clever, and the lyrics, which were contributed by William Cary Duncan, are not unusually brilliant; but a critical observer was astounded to discover the mere fact that the play had something to do with the songs and the songs had something to do with the play. Any evidence of sanity in a "musical comedy"—or even in a "comedy with music"—is so unusual as to require celebration. The music, composed by William Schroeder, is rather anæmic and thin. The scenery is adequate; the gowns are very ugly; the singing is commonplace; and the stage-direction is conventional.

"His Little Widows" would scarcely be worthy of consideration, were it not for the indication which it gives of a tendency toward the stricter standards of construction which are commonly respected in the type of farce that is acted without music. As the tired soldier said, upon the battlements of Elsinore, "For this relief, much thanks."

Make your nails immaculate with Cutex Nail White.

Cutex Nail Polish gives you a quick, waterproof polish.

Don't cut the cuticle. Cutting makes hangnails. Try the Cutex way of removing the cuticle.

Never again have hangnails

They are absolutely unnecessary

The most beautiful hands look hopelessly ugly if the nails are disfigured by hangnails.

The famous specialist, Dr. Edmund Saalfeld, says that hangnails have two causes. If the cuticle is allowed to grow up onto the surface of the nail, the skin will tear, become detached and form hangnails. To prevent hangnails your whole effort should be to keep the cuticle unbroken.

This is exactly what Cutex does. It removes the cuticle without cutting or clipping—leaves the skin at the base of the nail smooth and firm—unbroken.

How to have the quickest manicure, the loveliest nails

Wrap a little cotton around an orange stick and dip it into the Cutex bottle. Then work the stick around the base of the nail, gently pushing back the cuticle. Wipe off the dead surplus skin. Carefully rinse the hands in clear water. A touch of Cutex Nail White underneath the nails makes them immaculate. Finish with Cutex Nail Polish.

After a few applications, Cutex makes any nail look shapely and symmetrical. It quickly does away with hangnails—all the nail troubles rapidly disappear.

Start to have lovely nails today!

Ask for Cutex, the perfect cuticle remover, wherever toilet preparations are sold. Cutex comes in 50c and $1.00 bottles; introductory size 25c; Cutex Nail White is only 25c; Cutex Nail Polish in cake, paste, powder or liquid form is 25c. This Scientific Treatment not only stops the hair falling, but causes the growth of healthy, beautiful hair by disinfecting the hair follicles and pores; stimulating the blood supply in the deeper tissues of the scalp; and bringing to the hair-growing cells increased nourishment.

Desiring to serve the many people who do not reside in the cities where our Institutes are conducted, we have prepared a HOME TREATMENT BOX containing two tubes of our celebrated Analeptic Herbal Ointment; four Sachets of Herbs; a tablet of purest Olive Oil Soap containing no free alkali; and a copy of our illustrated MANUAL OF LESSONS ON THE SCIENTIFIC CARE OF THE HAIR AT HOME—an invaluable treatise on the care of the hair and the only book of its kind ever published.

In the successful treatment of the hair each case must be dealt with in accordance with its own particular requirements, and this we accomplish through personal correspondence and reports. A stranger in a strange land was Nan Watson's "Child with the Primroses," a fresh sketch which afforded one of the few pleasant moments to be enjoyed in the exhibition of the Independent Artists

Artists has gone, it may be possible that to the independent artists an exhibition jury still looks the part of the heavy villain. There is, however, no possible doubt of the fact that the great American public (including the critics), who have walked the weary miles of paint-covered canvas that filled the Grand Central Palace, visualize a jury with shining halos behind every head. Never had we realized the protection to eye and brain which lay in the eliminating hand of the jury. Beyond refutation by their strongest supporters have the Independent Artists proved that, as Mr. Royal Cortissoz well says, "the problem of American art is not space, but art."

THE FALLACY OF THE INDEPENDENTS

The fallacy of it all would seem to lie in the attempt to establish an exhibition on the order of the famous "Salon des Refusés" in Paris, through which the great Barbizon men first won public recognition, when, as a matter of fact, there is no analogy between present art conditions in America and the art conditions which prevailed in Paris about the year 1830.

In France at this period, the classicists, the followers of the traditions of the great David, himself but recently dead, possessed a dominance over art which can hardly be imagined in this day and country. Not even a hearing was accorded to art which ignored the classic formulas. Conditions here are quite the opposite of all this. Our galleries show and many of our magazines reproduce the wildest works of the wildest modernists. Publicity is showered upon them—the wilder the work, the greater the publicity—until it is perhaps not strange that our young artists have come so to mistake publicity for fame.

Proof that a showing has not been denied to these painters may be clearly seen in the lack of novelty presented in the Independents' exhibition. The "Armory Show," of four years ago, sounded a definitely new—if unwelcome—note in art; the

The spirit of spring and much of a spirit of fun were involved in "Grieg," which was contributed by George W. Richards to the exhibition of the Independent Artists

Grand Central Palace exhibition offered not even a surprise to vary its monotonous mediocrity, and one may unhesitatingly subscribe to the consensus of opinion that not ten per cent of the two thousand and odd works shown there could have passed even the lenient juries of the Academy,—and this, be it noted, not because of any opposition to the positive qualities of the canvases, but because of their total lack of positive qualities either pleasing or repelling.

Carrière's working theory was, "Man is a repoussé, beaten out from the inside." So it has ever been with art; the artist must himself work out his own salvation. Given even the hardest of conditions, the true artist will hammer out his own metal, reckless of praise and with even some thoughts beyond the immediate pecuniary rewards. True it is, no doubt, that the artist must live by his art; but those artists who are deeply concerned with their living seem fated to create but little art that lives.

The "Sun-Kissed" Face

IS your full enjoyment of the glorious, health-giving sunshine marred by the knowledge that it will bring out an unwelcome crop of freckles, or will redden or brown your skin until its clearness and beauty are things of the past?

If you have learned to dread the possession of a "sun-kissed" face do not hesitate to seek the advice of Madame Helena Rubinstein, whose marvellous freckle and sunburn preventives have revolutionized Beauty Culture.

The following are particularly recommended:—

VALAZE BEAUTIFYING SKINFOOD

Restores, stimulates and preserves the skin. Its effective results are noticeable in a striking manner. By the aid of VALAZE the sinking, flaccid tissues grow more robust and firm; the wrinkles become fainter; the muddy, drab, freckled, weather-beaten skin becomes clear, smooth and lustrous; the cheeks gain in succulence, color and beauty. It is not a "make-up" in any sense of the word—its mission is not to "put on" a show of "artificial beauty," but to bring to actual appearance the inherent beauty of every woman's face.

VALAZE has been used for years by the best-known women of aristocratic and royal circles abroad. Just as a good complexion is the foundation of real beauty, VALAZE is undeniably the foundation of a good complexion. As a matter of fact, there is no secret of beauty—but VALAZE! Price $1.00, $2.00 and $6.00 a jar.

The companion preparation is the VALAZE SKIN TONING LOTION, as better and more rapid results are obtained by their combined use. For a dry skin, the "Special" is used. Price $2.00 and $4.00. For greasy or normal skin, $1.25, $2.25 a bottle.

BLACKHEADS and GREASY, COARSE SKIN VALAZE BLACKHEAD AND OPEN PORE PASTE

Refines coarse skin texture, removes greasiness, blackheads and reduces enlarged pores. Used in place of soap. Price $1.00, $2.00 and $5.00.

VALAZE LIQUIDINE

Overcomes enlarged pores and oiliness of the skin, also undue flushing of nose and face. Price $1.50, $2.75 a bottle.

VALAZE SUNPROOF AND WINDPROOF BALM

Prevents freckles, tan and sunburn. Madame Rubinstein knows what this wonderful balm has done for women in the hot countries of South Africa, Australia, and the East Indies; and that in this country it can do no less. VALAZE SUNPROOF AND WINDPROOF BALM—to avoid all misunderstanding—is a preventative of freckles, not a cure. Unequalled as an anti-wrinkle preparation and foundation for powder. It is so harmless that it may be used for faces of children. Price $1.50, $3.00 and $5.00 a bottle.

FOR BAGGY, RELAXED AND FLABBY SKIN

When you feel that the muscles and throat are becoming flabby and loose, what is really required is something to remedy the defect. Among all the preparations that Madame Rubinstein has been able to recommend, the VALAZE ROMAN JELLY (price $1.50 and $3.00) is the best suited for this condition. Used in time, it will prevent such a condition as this.

FOR DOUBLE CHIN

VALAZE REDUCING JELLY (price $1.50 and $3.00) also the VALAZE REDUCING SOAP (price $1.25 a cake), are the two most effective preparations to remove a double chin as well as superfluous fat.

FOR IMPROVING GROWTH OF EYELASHES

VALAZE EYELASH CREAM stays falling eyelashes and eyebrows, strengthens their growth—at the same time darkening them. Price $1.50. Directions for the massage of eyes and temples, which will reduce wrinkles and restore brilliancy to lustreless eyes, accompany each jar.

VALAZE COMPLEXION POWDER

For normal and oily skin; NOVENA POUDRE, for dry skin. Price $1.00, $2.50 and $4.50.

At Madame Rubinstein's MAISON DE BEAUTE VALAZE treatments are administered for the removal of wrinkles, crows-feet, coarseness of skin, loose skin, double chin, relaxed muscles, puffiness under the eyes, blackheads, large open pores, acne, eczema and other complexion defects. The New York establishment radiates the same elegance, the same Spirit of Beauty as her famous salons in London and Paris—where for years the most beautiful women on the Continent have entrusted the care of their facial appearance to Madame Rubinstein. Queens, princesses, celebrated artistes, and leaders of high society—all acknowledge her to be the World's Greatest Beauty Culturist.

Madame Rubinstein's brochure "Beauty in the Making" (Comment se fait la beauté), will be sent on receipt of 2 cents postage.

Granges was fashioned from a rare old piece of Italian brocade, once an altar cloth in an ancient Venetian palazzo. A simple edge of gold galloon with handles of the same suffices for trimming, for the exquisite rose and blue and gold brocade upon its background is very rich.

Many commodious work-bags are run upon huge oval or round hoops of wood, covered with gold ribbon or braid, or bound with satin ribbons to hide their foundation. These bags are so easily opened and are of such generous proportions that most women prefer them to any other variety.

The chintz work-bag, which is nailed with gilt upholstery nails to the walking-stick, is remarkably convenient for the athletic girl who so often knits as she walks; the ball of yarn reposes safely in its bag, even when the crook of the stick is swung over her arm, until the stick is needed at a particularly steep place. This fashion originated in White Sulphur Springs,—at least, in America, it was first seen at this resort, though it later had a vogue in Newport. Mrs. Parmlee Herrick, daughter-in-law of Mr. Myron P. Herrick, the former Ambassador to France, invented this convenient bag; it was sold under her patronage, and the proceeds devoted to her pet French charity. Now these bags have come to be distinctly the fashion, and a certain Newport shop which furnishes them is kept busy filling its many orders.

THE BAGS THAT INHABIT CANADA

Some Canadian women are carrying very smart bags of the native Canadian homespun, dyed in all sorts of pastel shades and worked with charming designs in colored crewels. These bags are simply lined with unbleached cotton, and they are sturdy, utilitarian affairs, very convenient for the khaki colored hose which the Canadian women are loyally knitting for the boys at the front. Lady Williams-Taylor, Lady Ross, and many other Canadian women carry these useful and handsome bags.

Chintz bags of every rainbow color are carried, and they often match the gay linenized cretonne skirts which are worn so much in the country. An unusual bag is of natural colored linen, made like the old-fashioned beaded purses. In the middle of the oblong bag is a slit, which forms the opening, and the bag is slung through a Chinese jade bracelet, which is used as a handle. A smart woman whose French maid has an aptitude for making bags, has a series of bags made from silk ribbons, one to match each afternoon gown or suit. One set consists of twin bags, perhaps ten inches deep, made from black and gray satin ribbon striped with velvet, and each bag has draw-strings that terminate in a perky bow. These strings are tied to the handle of her stick or parasol; in one bag the purse and mouchoir are carried, while in the other are the inevitable vanity case, lip rouge, and powder. Another pair of bags are of pale blue satin ribbon striped with gold; these are attached to the ring at the bottom of a huge ostrich feather fan which she carries in the evening, for one is quite as dependent upon the contents of these bags in the evening as during the day.

BAGS THAT STARTLE

Mrs. W. Arthur Stickney of St. Louis designs her own bags, and they are indeed unique, with all sorts of Bakst and Poiret effects. Vivid purples, reds, greens, and pinks hobnob with one another, and the effect is startling in the extreme,—which is doubtless just as it is meant to be. Mrs. James Otis Hinkley of Chicago has a charming little knitting-bag of lavender silk with a round top, which is covered with the daintiest of little satin roses and leaves. One huge black and white chintz bag carried by a very tiny woman has life-sized apples and peaches and bunches of grapes in pink and red and purple, posed on the ends. One feels like saying, "Hello, bag. Where are you taking the lady?"

Lucy Locket and her pocket are passé now, for pockets are replaced by bags; and if those bags ever yielded up their contents, what tales they could tell! This is what tumbled out of one young woman's bag, when she accidentally upset it on a hotel porch:—A purple sweater, two balls of yarn, five knitting needles, a package of cigarettes, a diet list, a collection of letters, a crumpled telegram, three handkerchiefs, a pair of lavender silk stockings, a vanity case, a newspaper clipping, a photograph, a French novel, paper covered, and a pair of lace-frilled rosebud-dotted blue satin garters.

America's Magazines —their place in the Sun of Commerce

Their place in America's homes—millions of homes—that's an old story. Their place in commerce—that's newer. Their place in homes—educating, entertaining, inspiring—that has grown in the slow, steady strides of America's progress; their place in Commerce, by "leaps and bounds" alongside of the young giant of advertising.

Their place in Commerce depends upon their ability to sell things: ability to create a demand, and therefore a market, where no demand or market existed before; their ability to reach people and make them think—to carry a commercial message and imprint it in the brain of a Nation; ability to raise a people's scale of living, and to nationalize their styles and fashions as well as their soaps and breakfast foods; their ability to build up and maintain commercial Goodwill which business men yearly translate into assets worth millions of dollars.

For instance: There was no demand or market for fountain pens when the pioneer, only by much persuading, launched his venture in a magazine in 1884. Yet a Nation, and then the world, were opened up to his, and later to other men's, fountain pens.

What hours and days of women's work have been saved by various varieties of factory-preserved foods—from pickles to pineapples—made known through magazine advertising!

There was no crying need for a handy camera, no demand for an inexpensive watch, yet in magazine advertising the makers of both made them equally famous.

It required education to get people to accept "ready-made" music, but its creators educated the people so masterfully through magazine advertising that music is now practically universal in American homes.

Nothing started enameled bathtubs on their way to popularity until the maker began to "feel out" the people with his "Health depends upon Sanitation" idea in magazine advertisements. That idea the magazines turned into a national hobby.

Maybe you, Mr. Manufacturer, are making some article which Magazine Advertising can place in the homes of millions of people. We shall be glad to discuss ways and means with you.

A Day In June

In the Morning

Puffed Grains mixed with berries. Airy, crusty morsels which taste like nut-meats puffed. They add to a fruit dish what a flaky crust adds to a short-cake.

At Noon

These bubbles of grain in milk. They are toasted, thin and flavory. As every food cell is exploded, they easily digest. And every atom feeds.

At Playtime

These nut-like dainties doused with melted butter or just salted. Better than peanuts or popcorn, and whole-grain foods such as young folks need.

At Dinner

Puffed Rice on the ice cream. Like nut meats in taste, but so flimsy that they melt away like the cream. They make the dish doubly delicious.

Puffed Wheat      Puffed Rice
and Corn Puffs

Each 15c Except in Far West

Whole Grains Made to Taste Like Confections

Some whole grain foods are not very inviting. You know folks need them, but flour foods are liked better.

Here are the whole grains—wheat or rice—made into airy confections. Grains steam exploded—puffed to eight times normal size.

Crisp, flaky bubbles with a nut-like taste. Every food cell exploded, so digestion can instantly act.

No flour-made food compares with Puffed Grains. Don't serve it where Puffed Grains are better.

These are not occasional dainties. They are Prof. Anderson's scientific foods. Keep all three kinds on hand.

impersonated by Miss Polly Damrosch in red apron and still redder wig. Gentleman Jack was played by Mrs. B. Tappen Fairchild. Other members of the cast were Mrs. S. Bryce Wing, and Mrs. David Chester Noyes; the latter, in the capacity of a lady of long ago, wore the bewitching little hat, garlanded with tiny flowers and boasting a loose chin loop of soft green ribbon, which is sketched at the upper left on page 45.

Contrary to last year, the racing season opened under most auspicious weather conditions. For the first amateur race of the season run at Hewlett Bay Park under the auspices of the Rockaway Hunting Club, a fashionable and enthusiastic crowd assembled, filling the grandstand and overflowing the field. The races themselves, however, were disappointing. Some very good thoroughbreds were entered and the track was in beautiful condition, but, for some reason or other, the events were characterized by a series of blunders. At times all the horses were running in different directions, and none of the riders seemed to know the course, so that it was not at all unusual to see one of them come to a full stop midway in the race and ask one of the mounted clerks the right way around. In one of the races, the horse that came in last was judged the winner, inasmuch as he was the only one which had followed the right course.

SANCTION FOR THE "TAILLEUR"

Many of those present at these first races came from luncheon at the Rockaway Hunting Club and from country houses in the neighborhood; others motored down from New York. As the day was mild, top-coats were not in demand, and most of the women wore trim tailored suits with a bit of fur about the neck. Tan was the prevailing color, but blue, also, was definitely present. Here and there flashed a note of red, but, as a rule, there was no tendency toward country clothes, and the quieter colors and conventional lines of the tailored frocks and suits were adopted. Capes, usually of some softly draping material, were present in considerable numbers. The effectiveness of this garment for sports wear can not be denied, and it is unfortunate that it seems destined to become too popular to remain smart.

Miss Maud Kahn, who appears at the left in the photograph, at the upper right on page 44, wore a frock of soft tan cloth with a smartly looped skirt. Her hat of brown straw was encircled at the bottom of the crown and about the edge of the brim with tan feathers. Her companion in this photograph, Miss Rosalie Bloodgood, emphasized the vogue of braiding in her frock and wore opossum furs. Miss Katharine Porter, who is seen in the photograph at the upper left on page 44, with Mr. W. Whitewright Watson, wore an all-enveloping coat of tan velours de laine, and a hat with turned-down brim embroidered in leaf design. Mrs. Gurnee Munn, who appears in the middle of the photograph at the lower right on page 45, was especially smart in a dark suit and furs, a hat with a rim of white feathers, and a delicately figured veil. Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, at the bottom of page 44, in the middle, wore a sports coat of plaid velours de laine, white fox furs, and a fur-trimmed hat. One noted many hats flaring high from the face, after the fashion of that which Mrs. James T. Terry wears in the photograph at the lower left on page 45. The suit worn by Mrs. William Lowe Rice, who is Mrs. Terry's companion in this photograph, shows flowing lines which are somewhat unusual in suits this spring. The gown worn by Miss Susan Fish Dresser (at the top of page 44, in the middle) emphasized the vogue of tan and her dark furs and hat provided an agreeable note of contrast.

my neck. Finally, when I had just decided this thing would have to cease and was about to say as much, Monsieur returned, turned off the current, and severed diplomatic relations between me and the machine. I rose immediately. My one idea was to get away then and there, even though the wave was only quarter accomplished. Straight hair was the least of my troubles; I wanted to go while I had my health.

But my spirit was broken. Partly because of Monsieur's entreaties and partly because I was ashamed to acknowledge my cowardice to my friends, I fell back into the chair, and the process began all over again, this time with the hair in the middle of my head. When that agony was finished, they did my back hair. At last, when it was all over, I smiled tolerantly when I thought of the German atrocities.

They led me from the torture chamber and shampooed my hair again. I fully expected to see my hair come off in Monsieur's hands; I was all ready to say, "You see? I told you so." But it didn't. Monsieur dried it and then did tender things to it with a comb. I didn't have the heart to ask for a mirror; I expected the worst.

Eventually, Monsieur laid down his comb and stepping back, regarded my hair as a mother looks at her first born. Then, with dramatic suddenness, he flashed a mirror before me. I looked.

I know what Heaven will be like; I experienced it in that moment. I was incoherent with joy, the girl was vociferous with elation, and I think Monsieur shed tears. When things grew calmer, I left the place,—oh, the wonder of seeing my hair curl beneath my hat brim—and motored home, a new woman.

I had a few qualms on the way home. I wondered how the wave could possibly endure for more than a day.

"Well, I had one good minute, anyway," I comforted myself.

But the fates are kind, and as for Monsieur,—really, you know, he ought to be canonized. My hair is still with me, just as numerous as it was before, and it is behaving with almost human intelligence. It has opened up a new life for me. In the well-known words of the late Mr. Francis Scott Key, "Long may it wave!"

FOR THE UNFORTUNATE

They have been sick. They are just out of the hospital. They are penniless. They must get work at once.

They need presentable clothes—clothes to give them courage and self respect—clothes that will appear neat to prospective employers. In many accident cases their own clothes have been ruined.

The Volunteer Hospital

Handles 200 patients a day in its dispensary; has 40 beds and will soon have 90; its ambulance is assigned by the City of New York to cover the congested district from Chatham Square to the Battery and west to Broadway.

It aims to discharge its patients properly equipped to look for work and fight for their lives fairly.

Send Us Your Discarded Clothes

More than 1000 pieces of clothing have been distributed by the Volunteer Hospital since January 1. They have helped hundreds of unfortunate people to get a grip on life again.

Now there is no more clothing and no more funds.

Will you send us the clothes you no longer need? Garments of every kind for every age; or money contributions to purchase plain serviceable things, will be gratefully received.

A postal or telephone call will bring our wagon to you

REDUCE Naturally and Easily Eat Basy Bread With Your Meals

FAT cannot be removed by medication, nor can it be sweated off, starved off, purged off or massaged off. The only logical—the only safe, sane and certain—way to reduce is to so regulate one's food that Nature of her own accord will gradually expel it. And therein lies the remarkable virtues of BASY BREAD.

This remarkable scientific discovery has brought permanent relief to thousands of people who despaired of ever reducing to normal weight. It is at once the most rational, hygienic, simplest, easiest, most inexpensive and surest way of reducing fat ever devised. Simply eat three slices of this pure, delicious bread each day and it will drive the fat away—and prevent it from re-forming. No trying diet is imposed upon you; no arduous physical exercise; positively no medicine. The remarkable virtues of BASY BREAD are interestingly told in a booklet which we will gladly mail to you on request. Write today.

THE WOMAN of FASHION SHOULDERS HER GUN

An excellent coat for wet weather shooting is made of waterproof cotton and wool material and is very ample in the back and very close at the wrists is the fact that the equipment for it is not at all elaborate. Not a few large private estates are already provided with their own traps; "Georgian Court," the estate of Mr. George J. Gould at Lakewood, has for a number of seasons been equipped with traps, and it is anticipated that many other estates will shortly be provided with the same facilities. Two types of traps are in use. One is a stationary trap, which is located behind some kind of shot-proof shelter at a distance from the platform upon which the shooters stand. This type of trap is used in the photograph at the upper right on page 64. When ready for the shot, the person who is shooting calls the word, "pull," and the target is then let fly.

"STRAIGHTAWAYS" FOR THE BEGINNER

With beginners, the targets are of the sort called "straightaways," that is, they are sent along a certain line, so that the novice knows exactly where to look for them. Later the targets are let fly at unknown angles, and this, of course, requires more skill in the woman behind the gun.

The other type of trap is shown in the photograph at the foot of this page; it is being operated by the man at the right in the picture, and the target is visible in the air toward the left. Mrs. Earle is shooting in this picture, and with her is Mrs. George Garr Henry. This is a hand-trap and may be carried to any desired place, as it is not at all cumbersome. This hand-trap is an apparatus not entirely unlike a gun in appearance, and the targets are let fly from it by means of a strong spring.

As to such practical details as powder and shot and guns for trap-shooting, beginners usually learn with a twenty-gage shotgun, as that is an easy size to handle. When she has grown accustomed to a gun, a woman may change to twelve-gage gun, which is the regulation for trap-shooting among sportsmen. A trap-shooting gun is always equipped with a bridge at the top, which may be noted in the illustrations. The purpose of this bridge is to prevent the heat waves which otherwise rise from the heated barrel after the gun has been fired a number of times and interfere with the sight. In shooting, other than trap-shooting, this is not necessary, as the gun is seldom fired at such short intervals.

THE WARDROBE OF TRAP-SHOOTING

In clothes for trap-shooting, a woman's requirements are rather simple. There are just two points that are essential in the making of a shooting costume as distinguished from other sports costumes. The first is that the sleeves shall permit absolute freedom of movement for the arms, and the second that the right shoulder have a suede pad against which to rest the gun when shooting. In the sketch at the bottom of page 64, in the middle, is shown an outfit made for Mrs. Earle by Baker, Murray, and Imbrie. It is fashioned of a dark brown sports cloth and consists of a skirt, a shooting vest with satin sleeves, and a jacket. The skirt is a simple circular model. The jacket is fashioned somewhat on the lines of a Norfolk. The interesting thing about the coat is in the two laid-in box plaits across the shoulders, which are held in place by bands of elastic which stretch from arm to arm at the back. It is, as a rule, more comfortable to shoot in the vest, which has satin sleeves and is provided with a leather gun-pad, but if on

Those who follow trap-shooting on its rounds of the fashionable resorts will have need of a trunk such as this, designed to carry guns, shooting costume and even fishing rods. Trap-shooting gun and gloves lie beside the trunk

a very cold day, the wearer wishes to shoot in the coat, this elastic gives plenty of room and entire freedom of the arms. With a suit of this sort, a mannish hat and stout brown leather sports shoes are worn. As trap-shooting is usually done from a platform, boots are not necessary.

It is not customary to wear gloves in trap-shooting. It is less difficult to manipulate a gun quickly and accurately, when it is held with the bare hand. In very cold weather, however, a glove may be worn on the left hand, as Mrs. Earle wears it in the photograph at the upper left on page 64. Special shooting gloves for both hands are made, and these are sketched at the bottom of the photograph at the top of this page. The right glove is made entirely of a very soft chamois with holes cut away at the back for the knuckles, and it is usually well to cut out the trigger-finger also. The left glove is similar to the right, except that it is faced in the palm with a heavy leather so as to protect the hand in holding the gun. Both gloves fasten at the back instead of in the palm; they are sold by Baker, Murray, and Imbrie.

COSTUMES DESIGNED FOR THE SPORT

With this article are shown three very smart trap-shooting outfits especially designed by Wetzel for this newly popular sport. The sketch on the right at the bottom of page 64 shows a skirt and coat of homespun. The materials of coat and skirt are different. That in the coat is of a warm brownish shade with a white twill and with white and brown cross-bars. The skirt is of a darker shade of brown, also combined with white. The coat is equipped with the necessary leather gun-pad, and in addition there is a leather pad on the skirt against which the wearer may rest her gun when not in action. The coat has reinforced pouch pockets in which to carry cartridges. The shirt which is worn with this suit is of a distinctly mannish type made of a striped silk with a soft turn-over collar of the same material and a plain mannish tie. At the side of the soft brown hat is a feather.

THE INFORMAL SHOOTING OUTFIT

A less formal shooting outfit appears in the sketch at the lower left on page 64. The skirt is of white flannel, and the soft silk shirt has a fine black stripe in it and is worn with a black four-in-hand tie. The shooting waistcoat is made of a light jade-colored worsted lined with a soft white flannel with black cross-bars in it; it has the necessary gun-pad at the right shoulder, and at either side are pouch pockets reinforced so that cartridges may be carried in them. The hat worn with this outfit is of fine, pliable,

Italian leghorn straw, finished with a simple ribbon band showing the colors of the shooting club to which its wearer belongs.

The coat in the sketch at the top of page 140 is of taupe wool and cotton twill. Across the back there is an inverted plait which lets out a great deal of fulness so that the arms may be lifted without difficulty. The pockets are very deep and have a buttoned flap inside that may be unfastened to give access to the pockets in the costume beneath the coat. The material is waterproofed, the sleeves are so cut as to be drawn in tight about the hand with the straps, and the collar may be turned up, as illustrated, and fastened tightly about the neck. This is excellent for wet-weather shooting.

At White Sulphur Springs a number of young women this season are wearing, for shooting, sleeveless sports jackets not unlike that in the sketch at the bottom of page 64 at the left. They are made of warm homespun and hopsacking, as well as of smoother cloths. A jersey cloth sports dress on very simple lines is suitable for trap-shooting and is very satisfactory because the material is so soft that it permits the maximum of freedom of movement. With an outfit of this kind, one should never attempt to carry the cartridges in the pocket; a cartridge-belt and cartridge-pouch should be used. The pouch and belt may be made of the same material as the dress itself, but staunchly reinforced. A leather belt and pouch with a jersey cloth dress are also very smart. For exceedingly warm weather, a skirt and vest of pongee of natural colored tussur may be worn, but these are not so practical or so smart as the wool shooting clothes.

FOR THE SPORTSWOMAN WHO TRAVELS

Leather clothes for trap-shooting are practical for cold weather. One coat of this type is made of a warm brown buckskin with sleeves of lighter leather trimmed with suède. Others are of leather with silk sleeves, and all have plenty of pockets. There is a man's shooting shirt which is made of waterproofed chamois which becomes softer and softer with wear.

For the woman who would make trap-shooting one of her interests at the various smart resorts, a very necessary accessory is the gun trunk sketched at the top of this page. The lower part of this trunk is fitted with several compartments in which the shooting clothes may be stowed away. The partitions are removable, so that the number of compartments may be increased or decreased as one desires. The upper tray is arranged, as illustrated, so that guns and, if desired, fishing-rods as well, will fit into it; this trunk is from Crouch and Fitzgerald.

COMPLETE WEEK ENDS FOR EXCHANGE

IT was on a Friday afternoon, and it was five-thirty, by New York clocks. "Greeley, 5400? Two rooms and a bath for to-morrow night," James Baxter demanded confidently. "No? Very well, one room and bath . . . Wh-a-t—not anything?" There was dismay in his tone. To go to some other hotel would be worse than surrendering one's bedroom for a crowded week-end party. Why, at the Waldorf every one knew exactly what he wanted—what all his family wanted—the Waldorf had understood the varying needs of the Baxters for two generations. There, he had the kind of room he liked; his telephone calls were carefully taken; his particular waiter remembered exactly how he liked his meats; the bootblack, the manicurist, the barber, the presser, understood his needs; the valet service was excellent. But what must be, must . . .

"Murray Hill 7600 . . . desk . . . two rooms and bath for to-morrow night, Saturday." He had never stopped at the Ritz-Carlton. He knew he was not going to be so comfortable as at his old hotel. It was trying, the prospect of having to tell a new set of people just how he liked everything. Not the fault of the Ritz-Carlton, obviously, but Baxter at the telephone did not think of that. Perhaps his tone was a trifle patronizing—he did not mean it to be so. But he was met by a second negative, even more positive than the first.

AN UNSUCCESSFUL RAID

Then he tried Sherry's, the Vanderbilt, then half a dozen hotels in the theatre district, only to be refused by clerks grown weary of saying, "No, no more, very sorry, sir," "Nothing left," "All full," "Full up," according to their varying powers of English.

"Ah, well," Baxter supposed he might as well try the Plaza. It was really too far away from Forty-second street; but he had had enough of motoring out to the country and back every week. The answer was that they had already turned away numberless would-be guests.

There was nothing at Delmonico's. What was coming over New York anyway? He finally gave up hope of engaging rooms in any of the big caravansaries, and began to think of somewhat out-of-the-way hotels like the Brevoort and the Netherlands.

Finally he had to stop; it was nearly time for his wife's dinner to the Forsters. The next few days didn't look like a week-end; they looked like a week's work. There would be no joy in the theater party and supper on Saturday night if they were going to juggle with "last trains," or motor twenty miles out to "Overhill." That was what they called their house, standing just over the crest of a wind-swept bluff. And there would be no rest Sunday morning. They would have to motor back to town to keep a luncheon engagement at the Tiverton's. The Baxters finally spent that Friday and the remnant of Saturday night at the Gordons', for the Gordons' latch-string hung always out for them.

UNLUCKY WEEK ENDS

The next week end was as bad. The hotels continued to be crowded. The Baxters began to come in to town with less than their usual frequency. They were the sort who do not enjoy booking rooms a month ahead in order to attend the opera, because, as they urged, "How does one ever know a month in advance that one will feel like listening to 'Aida'?" Perhaps the play will be the thing, or a benefit for wounded soldiers." It is sad to think of giving up these delightful spur-of-the-moment trips into town just on account of the whims of hotels.

The Gordons' guest chamber helped, of course. But one can not go on indefinitely pulling the latch-string of even the most hospitable of friends. At times, a house in town seemed the one thing to be desired; then they would hear the Gordons bemoaning the limitations of town. Trips to resorts, the Gordons said, did not at all take the place of a house in the country to which one could escape from the distractions of town and where there would be, on the landscape, only the chosen few invited to be there.

It was about this time that the Baxters and the Gordons simultaneously hit upon the happy idea of exchanging houses over week ends. It was delightful. Why hadn't they thought of it before? Why wasn't everybody doing it? A great burden-lifting invention like that is so simple and so obvious that no one ever thinks of it. The menus could be sent on ahead, the bills hung on separate pegs, and the cooks appeased with largesse. After the past weeks of futile last-moment efforts to get rooms, and the deadly forehanded hours spent in telephoning that had reduced the Baxters to exhaustion and despair, the new idea of exchanging houses over week ends came to them with all the gaiety of a spring day. It involved setting a date, but one only about a week in the future, and when one has been cut off from the charming nonsense of late hours and the pleasant dalliance over supper that comes with the comforting subconsciousness that one's home is just around the corner or only five floors up, then one knows for a certainty that no matter what the frivolity is to be, it will be welcome.

THE LUXURY OF LEISURE

Alice Baxter, installed in the Gordons' house, sank into the day bed of the boudoir with a delicious sense of ease. The exchange of houses meant half an hour of relaxation before dressing for dinner at Sherry's instead of the early dressing necessitated by motoring in from Westchester. The luxuriousness of the town house was a joy after the more vigorous atmosphere of her country place that she had worked so hard to keep really simple. And James Baxter read his papers half an hour longer on Saturday morning, delaying over his coffee with an urbanity that, it must be confessed, did not always pervade his breakfast in the country, before the dash to town.

The country was working an equal charm for the Gordons. They stayed outdoors on the wind-swept hills until they were red-cheeked and buffeted. "Overhill," with its beamed low-ceiled living-room, so picturesque with brass and Hungarian red furniture, seemed a place to stay in forever; there one could read and brood by the great-throated fireplace, walk from window to window for wide-pictured sweeps of hills, hurry out in sheer gladness to golf and skate,—and hurry back again, for its charming intimate quality was not to be resisted. The silence of evening, the candle-light, the glow of the fire, capped the day's sport with a drowsiness that is never quite achieved at an inn, with its lights and its people that compel one to an over-stimulated gaiety. Morning would bring the sun, climbing up over the rim of the world. One never saw that in town, Gordon averred; he hadn't seen the old chap getting up since last summer.

The Gordons were happy, the Baxters were delighted; and their fortnightly exchange of week ends became a year-round institution.

H. G. Wells' New Novel

"The Soul of a Bishop"

A NEW Wells novel! The words will carry a thrill to anyone who read last year's sensational Collier serial "Mr. Britling Sees It Through."

As in "Mr. Britling" Wells showed the astounding effect of the Great War on the normal civilian life of England, so in "The Soul of a Bishop" he shows its effect on that bulwark of society, the Church.

The Bishop, brought up in reverence for the forms of religion, is overwhelmed by the terrific questions that the war hurls upon him, questions which these forms cannot help him answer.

Wells' solution is revolutionary. Yet his book is deeply religious. And he puts his thesis to you, as in "Mr.

Britling," through a moving story of real human beings.

"The Soul of a Bishop" will create intense discussion everywhere. No thinking person, in or out of the church, can afford to miss this dramatic study of a man's most elaborate institution flung up against the grim realities of a world-crisis.

The publication of "The Soul of a Bishop" comes at an apt moment—the moment when America is just beginning to realize her own part in that crisis and envisage some of the material and spiritual transformations it may bring to her.

This remarkable new novel by the foremost English imaginative writer of to-day—

Tea and Cakes in an English Garden

The Home of a Woman's Dreams

IT may be a flowery paradise, delightful with gardens and trees, or it may be a city flat. Wherever it is, it is the center of her life, her corner of the world to make beautiful. She would make it beautiful for others, too—for dear ones to be happy in.

Yet the task is not simple; for a real home requires more than the expenditure of money. How many magnificent places you have seen, where you remained only to admire, and went away cold? And how many tiny places you have seen, about whose modest hearth there lingered a charm of cheer and sweet repose that went straight to your heart?

What Makes the Difference?

To have a satisfying home, you must interest yourself in its growth. You must live not only in it but with it. There is always room for improvement, and trying to improve things is the most inspiring work on earth.

But intelligent interest requires good taste—the ability to distinguish between that which attracts and that which repels, in furniture, in hangings, in rugs, in buying new things, in restoring old things.

To develop good taste, one must get ideas from those who know, from those who devote their lives to home-making—architects, landscape gardeners, interior decorators, experts in housekeeping.

Such authorities as these are writing for
